OLD VOTERS ARE UP AGAINST IT

Cast Many Presidential Votes But Run Into Stump This Time.

MUST NATURALIZE

Some of the old residents of Fort Wayne who have cast their ballot at four or five presidential elections are staggered over the predicament in which they find themselves on account of the registration law. These men, whose parents came over from the old country, were never naturalized, and now after having assisted in previous elections for so many years, they will not be allowed to vote unless they first take out naturalization papers. The registration blank which will be filled out and signed by voters at the first registration Thursday, call for an answer to the question, "Where and when were you naturalized?"

"As far as I can learn these cases are about equally divided among the democrats and republicans," said Republican County Chairman A. F. Houk. "The office is visited several times each day by old men who find themselves cast in this peculiar situation. Many are indignant, and some have signified their intentions of taking out naturalization papers. These men have no recollection of their parents ever having been naturalized. One old man, who came to America with his mother when he was seven years of age was at the office yesterday with a complaint to register. He had cast his vote for Lincoln when he ran his second term. He cannot vote this autumn because he is not naturalized, although in years past he never failed to cast his ballot."

Members of the republican central committee in the city will meet Wednesday evening at the office of Mr. Houk and clerks and inspectors will be given final instructions before registration day polls are opened. A few leaders throughout the county do not expect a heavy registration on Thursday.

Twelfth district democrats, under the leadership of District Chairman E. H. Hoffman and Maurice Niezer, who is a delegate to the national convention, are planning to secure enough party supporters to enable the district to send a special train to the Baltimore convention. Negotiations are now pending for special rates to be made for operating a train at exceedingly low figures.

Columbia City democrats are planning to take a band with them to the national convention. Columbia City is proud of Governor Marshall and will endeavor to lend him his all the support possible from Whitley county.

MINERS IN UGLY MOOD.

Idle Men in Mount Carmel Region Threaten Trouble.

Mount Carmel, Pa., May 7.—The idle mine workers are still in an ugly mood. Today 500 of them, attended by a sprinkling of women, stopped a train and prevented carpenters, firemen and other company hands from going to work at the mines. William Watkins, a stable boy, was badly hurt.

During the excitement twenty members of troop B of the state police arrived. As the troopers, mounted and heavily armed, rode through the town on their way to the collieries crowds of pickets stationed on the paths and roads leading to the mines disappeared.

"FACTIONS" PLAY FOR CONTROL.

Harrisburg, Pa., May 7.—The two factions of the democratic party met in a single convention here today to nominate a state ticket, four congressmen at large, delegates to the national convention and presidential electors at large. The supreme interest in the convention was on the question as to which faction of the party was in control but this had not been decided when the convention took a recess at 1:50 o'clock until 2:30 p. m. The recess was taken to permit the convention committees to proceed with the work laid out for them.

HE WAS ARMORED LIKE A CRUISER

Floyd Allen Was Fixed to Stop Bullets Before Shooting Began.

TRIAL GOES FORWARD

Wytheville, Va., May 7.—Further evidence that Floyd Allen wore bullet proof protection in the Hillsville court place March 14, was brought out during the trial of Allen here today for the murder of Prosecutor Foster.

Deputy Sheriff Gillespie testified that after the shooting began he had fired four shots point blank at Floyd Allen. Gillespie said he had wondered why the shots had not taken effect. He made a careful examination of the court room, but could find no shots in the wall opposite the point from which he had shot at Allen. Before Allen was arrested he changed his clothes and Gillespie firmly believes the Allen classman, the day of the tragedy, wore a breast plate or some other armor protection.

Several witnesses testified today that shots were fired by members of the Allen clan before court officers and others did any shooting.

The commonwealth continued to produce witnesses by whose testimony the prosecution hopes to establish the fact that a conspiracy had been formed by the Allen to shoot their way out of court in defiance of the laws should Floyd Allen be sentenced to prison. "It don't take but mighty little of the right kind of stuff to turn bullets," was one of Floyd Allen's first remarks to his guard after his capture following the Hillsville court house shooting last March.

CLAUDE CREATES A "VALID TRUST"

Supreme Court of New Hampshire in Ruling on Eddy Will.

SAFELY WITHIN LAW

Concord, N. H., May 7.—The clause of the will of Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, founder of the Christian Science church, bequeathing the residue of her estate, valued at $2,000,000 to the First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, creates a "valid trust" in the opinion of the supreme court of New Hampshire, announced today. The court holds that "the residuary clause is not a gift to a church, but a gift for religious purposes sustainable as a charitable trust."

The court's decision was given in the bill in equity brought by George W. Glover, of Lond, S. D., Mrs. Eddy's son, in the Merrimack county superior court to have the residuary clause declared invalid on the ground that it violated a New Hampshire statute limiting the amount which can be bequeathed to any single church. The case was transferred to the supreme court for the determination of the point of law involved.

Glover sought, in case the residuary clause should be declared invalid, to have the residue divided between himself and Dr. Ebenezer J. Foster Eddy, of Waterbury, Vt., Mrs. Eddy's adopted son, as the next of kin. The case must now be tried in the superior court, but today's decision disposes of the principal contention of the plaintiff.

WASHINGTON IS ALL AGOG.

Supposed "Human Fly" on Monument Causes Excitement.

Washington, May 7.—Rumors that a New York "human fly," who has been sealing office buildings here, was eluding the side of the 555 feet Washington monument, gave this city no end of excitement today. Some one suddenly discovered a black spot on the side of the shaft about 150 feet from the top and then the report started. Hundreds of people rushed toward the monument grounds, a half mile from the center of the city. Along Penna avenue crowds collected at every corner and windows and doorways rapidly filled with people. Newspaper photographers, who were early on the scene, and other investigators brought back word that the supposed figure was only a spot left by last night's heavy rain; but up to an early hour this afternoon gazes on Penna avenue were still insisting they could see the figure move. The war department, which controls the monument, was besieged with telephone calls. Nearly three hours later telephone messages from the capital said that legislators were watching the spot through opera glasses and were convinced that it occasionally moved a little.

CITY REVOKES FRANCHISE

Richmond Cancels Right to Operate City Car Service.

Richmond, Ind., May 7.—By a vote of 1 to 1, the city council last night passed an ordinance revoking the franchise of the Terre Haute, Indianapolis & Eastern Traction company to operate a city service.

The board of works today endorsed the council's action. The ordinance provides that the company must make numerous improvements in its system within ninety days. No attempt will be made by the city to prevent the company from operating its cars until the ninety day period expires, but at that time if the improvements set forth are not made, city attorney Gardner says the traction company will be prevented from operating in Richmond. The company, it is said, will comply with the provisions of the ordinance and already has planned improvements.

NEW INTERURBAN ROUTES NEEDED

Merchants Endorse New Line and Discuss Sign Ordinance.

NAME COMMITTEES

President George M. Haffner, L. M. Hallenstein, C. M. Mills, Harry Achenbach and G. J. Parrot, have been named as a special committee representing the Fort Wayne Retail Merchants' association to plan amendments to the new sign ordinance recently passed by the council and to meet with that body some time this week in an attempt to arrive at some peaceable settlement.

The merchants' association at its regular meeting Monday night agreed that the new law is entirely too stringent and should be remedied.

The merchants believe that if the new ordinance is enforced it will abolish practically every one of the new electric signs in the city for which they have spent hundreds of dollars recently.

E. S. Myers, of the light department of the Fort Wayne and Northern Indiana Traction company, who has made a careful study of sign ordinances in other cities, informed the members of the association that the new law here is too stringent, limiting the size and style of signs to too small an area. It is the opinion of a number of merchants that signs should be placed lower than fourteen feet from the sidewalk.

Want More Interurbans.

The association, realizing the value to local business of interurbans operating into Fort Wayne, has decided to assist in any manner possible the new Toledo-Fort Wayne line now under course of construction. The association also discussed the possibilities of interurban construction through Whitley and Kosciusko counties. Mr. Dukes was named chairman of a committee to investigate this proposition. The members of the committee are D. N. Foster, A. J. Moynihan, Walter Seavey and Henry Beadell.

A Noted Doctor Says.

Everyone should use some little antiseptic in the shoes. Confining the feet in shoes is in itself unnatural and causes a moist or smarting condition. People of refinement now use Allen's Foot-Powder, the antiseptic powder to be shaken into the shoes, and would as soon go without a dentifrice as without the use of Allen's Foot-Powder.

Governor Marshall's View of It.

Governor Marshall, in an interview given a New York newspaper, sets forth his views regarding candidacy for a presidential nomination and he puts the matter upon an exalted plane that is the more striking by contrast with the mad scramble for delegates in which President Taft and Mr. Roosevelt are now indulging.

"It is the opportunity for service rather than the honors that go with the presidency, that is most attractive to me," the governor is quoted as saying. "I owe to my country loyalty, devotion and service—the best that is in me, even to the last drop of blood in my veins, but I am not foolish enough to believe that I am the only man in the country for that exalted office."

Continuing, the governor takes the position that he will ask no man to vote for him, and adds that he is making no effort, even, to have his name placed upon the preference ballots in the various states where presidential primaries are being held. The declaration of his position can have but one result—to elevate Governor Marshall in the minds of all who appreciate the fact that due dignity should surround not only the presidential office itself, but also the manner of acquiring that office. And it will be found that a rather large proportion of the American people cling to the old-fashioned idea that the presidency is too exalted a position to be made the subject of a free-for-all fight. Governor Marshall may or may not figure largely in the outcome of the Baltimore convention, but he is maintaining his position with dignity and pursuing a course that can not fail to raise him in the estimation of the American people.

It has been deemed necessary to place especial emphasis upon the declaration that the resignation of Assistant Superintendent Leaf, of the Indiana reformatory at Jeffersonville, is purely voluntary, entirely pacific, and that it was not preceded by internal disruption of any kind whatever. Somehow or other, we have gotten into the habit of looking for fireworks whenever an official change occurs at Jeffersonville.

Washington has at last discovered that the percentage of illiteracy in Indiana is steadily decreasing, and that this state has now a much lower percentage of inhabitants who are unable to read and write than was the case ten years ago. Washington need not have waited until the census report disclosed this patent fact. We Hoosiers would have admitted it long ago.

Hearings in the government's suit to dissolve the United States Steel corporation have begun, it is true, but think of the cruelty of keeping the steel magnates in harrowing suspense for a year or more before telling them whether they are a trust or not!

Mr. Roosevelt's famous Ananias club is not only increasing numerically of late, but in heft and distinction as well.

JUSTICE, COAL AND GROCERIES

(Kansas City Star)

So little is the fundamental conception of justice held by those who administer justice for us that a demand for the free administration of justice is quite beyond the comprehension of most lawyers. Able members of the profession have said with evident sincerity that one might as well demand free coal and free groceries as free justice!

Their trouble is that they cannot get it out of their heads that attorneys-at-law are indispensable. Undoubtedly one could no more go to a lawyer under the present system and say, "Mr. Smith, I demand that you give your time and talents to me without charge"—one could no more justly expect such services free than he could expect the coal man or the grocer to give him commodities for nothing.

Justice must be taken out of the domain of private enterprise. Lawyers should be attached to the court, not merely nominally, as they are now, but actually, as judges and jurors are. They should be paid by the people. What outlay the people would thus incur through the wrong of someone should be recovered from the wrongful person. Free justice does not imply free injustice.

The activities of lawyers as officers of the court would thus be limited to ascertainment of the facts. This would be a vast incidental benefit. It would raise the moral tone of society.

The expense of litigation would decrease enormously if justice were administered without privately paid lawyers. Many of the most thriving departments of litigation would be abandoned almost completely. The workmen's compensation statutes illustrate how this would come about. The definite ascertainment of status by those laws make their administration more clerical than judicial. Without the incentive of fees to make the law chaotic, more of its departments would be set in order.

Other agencies to lessening litigation are such arbitration arrangements as nearly all our commercial organizations, boards of trade and others, have devised.

To administer justice should be the same as to protect rights. To protect rights is the chief, if it is not the only, proper function of organized society. That function should not be for sale.

The rich man goes to the coal merchant and buys more coal than the poor man buys.

The rich man goes to the groceries merchant and buys more groceries than the poor man buys.

The rich man goes to the justice merchants and buys more justice than the poor man buys.

THE COST OF SWELL LIVING

(Zanesville Recorder)

In passing upon a point raised in a New York divorce case, Justice Scott said that he "did not think it likely that on a salary of $7,000 a year a man would save much, if anything."

In the cost of living New York does not differ greatly from the rest of our larger cities, nor are New York people of a different species from those of other sections.

It is not long since an income of $7,000 was deemed ample to meet all the demands made on a generous purse, and provide a sufficient margin for a bank account of good proportions.

A quarter of a century ago $7,000 a year commanded a high grade of ability. It secured executive capacity of the second, if not of the first, order, and a lawyer or a physician with an income of this size was deemed decidedly successful. A position on the bench paying $8,000 a year was a prize coveted by lawyers. Now a judge holding such a post for the honor in it or for the patriotic purpose of serving the public, and resisting the enticement of a corporation salary ten times as large, is by no means rare.

It is seldom nowadays that even the higher salaried official positions are sought except by men who have means of their own to enable them to "give up to their positions," or by men who have schemes of politics or graft.

The idea seems to prevail that social standing cannot be secured or retained in this country except through lavish use of money. No doubt lots of people can secure it in no other way. But there are others.

Not long ago Mrs. Russell Sage, widow of the multi-millionaire, declared that it isn't really the wealthy people who make a display—"it's the people who want to make other people think they are wealthy."

It is no doubt true that the greatest display is made not by the immensely wealthy but by those who desire to appear so. People secure in their standing do not need to make parade of their wealth.

And, after all, the essential comforts of life do not cost much. The billionaire can buy few more real comforts than his coachman can.

MAN WANTS EQUALITY.

Deserted by Spouse Wants Rights for His Sex.

Muncie, Ind., May 7.—"The thing we need least is woman suffrage, and the thing we need most is to give men equal rights and privileges with the woman," declared Joseph O. Hutzler, who is seeking the whereabouts of his wife and son.

His wife and son disappeared from the Hutzler home some weeks ago, and the husband and father has spent all of his time and much money in trying to locate them. What he wants, he says, is equal rights of men and women instead of special consideration for women in the state laws.

"I'd like to know why it is," said he, "that men we elect to office to represent us in the Indiana legislature go to Indianapolis and pass laws that will send a man to the state penitentiary for deserting his family, and enact no statute under which a woman can be punished for deserting her husband and home. Understand, I'm not saying that a man who runs away from his wife and children should not be punished. I think he should. But how can you reconcile my case, where my wife and my son have left me, and I'm without legal recourse?"

ODD AFFAIR IN A HOSPITAL.

Dumb Woman Patient Regains Speech But Loses Sight and Hearing.

Xenia, O., May 7.—Dumb for forty-five years, Miss Olive Hoversick, age sixty, an invalid, resident of the Greene county infirmary, has suddenly regained her power of speech. Restoration of her speech followed a decline in her physical condition, which was accompanied by failure of sight and hearing.

The woman suddenly began talking, and never since has she alluded to the change. She converses easily and with no indication that she might again become dumb.

Miss Hoversick's affliction followed an affection of the spine which resulted from rope jumping when she was twelve years old.

Her death is imminent and she has made all arrangements for her funeral.

CITY PAUPER HAD MONEY.

Niece Repays City Every Dollar Spent on Aged Miser.

Terre Haute, May 7.—For several months before his death the city supported Joseph Esrey, a hermit, who lived in a shack on the river bank. Last week a messenger left the amount of money the city had spent with the city treasurer, and then it developed that his niece and heir, in searching his hut, found more than a thousand dollars in cash.

She knew that the city had been supporting Esrey and she repaid every dollar of the money. Esrey was an eccentric character, well educated, but inclined to the life of a hermit. When his rooms were searched a fine collection of books in the Latin and Greek texts was found.

The rooms contained many suits of clothing and more than one hundred undergarments of the finest quality, but yellow with age.

All Men Are Different

Ready-made clothes are turned out under a system which presupposes that all men of the same chest measure are alike in every respect. The ready-maker cannot produce his sizes so as to eliminate the differences which all men possess in other parts of their figures. Five men may have the same width of chest, but one will have a larger waist, another longer arms, a third sloping shoulders, a fourth may stoop, a fifth may have tremendous shoulder blades. It is impossible for clothes to have individuality and to fit properly all over unless they are built to individual measure, taking into account every portion of the figure.

LEIKAUF'S TAKE ANOTHER APPEAL

Fine of $25 and Costs Against Packing Company in City Court.

NO TESTIMONY TAKEN

In the city court today the Leikauf Packing company took another appeal to the circuit court in a case in which a fine of $25 and costs was assessed for offering for sale the meat from an animal not slaughtered in a licensed slaughterhouse.

No evidence was taken under the affidavit which charges that the offense was committed on April 24 and the same course was followed that has been the custom in similar cases brought under the milk and meat ordinance passed by the city council several years ago.

Young Men Are Fined.

Jerry Danahy was fined $5 and costs in the city court today on a charge of public intoxication and a young fellow who gave the name of Jim Smith, drew $10 and costs for over driving a horse belonging to Gerding Brothers.

They were picked up by the police late yesterday afternoon and the horse was nearly worn out from the effects of a drive they had given him during the afternoon.

The Other Cases.

Henry Rovine, charged with disorderly conduct, was acquitted.

Joseph Duffy, plain drunk, was let go with a warning.

Frank Anderson, who just got out of jail a day or two ago, was sent back fifteen days for drunkenness.

Fred Baker, plain drunk, was held under a continuance until Friday.

Charles Martin, a blacksmith living near Robison park, was held until tomorrow on a charge of neglecting his children.

WORKMEN'S BILL PASSES, 64 TO 15

Senate Adopts Compensation Act After a Sharp Fight.

GOES TO THE HOUSE

Washington, May 7.—The workmen's compensation bill was passed in the senate yesterday, 64 to 15, substantially as framed by the employers' liability commission and amended only to increase its benefits. The measure, sharply fought by some of the democrats for several days, now goes to the house. A number of amendments were offered, but only a few were accepted and those were with the acquiescence of Senator Sutherland, in charge of the bill.

The principal changes, made during the hours of roll calls, provide that compensation for accidental injury and death of railroad employees shall continue to children until they are sixteen years old and would extend payment in the case of daughters until they are twenty, unless sooner married.

In general, the bill would provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental disability or death to employees of railroads in interstate commerce or of insuring each employee against results of injury in employment without reference to contributory negligence or any of the rules of common law limiting employers' liability. It would provide medical service for the injured and means for money recovery proportioned to the pay of the victim. It is the outcome of a long investigation by the commission and was strongly urged by President Taft.

In the long debate which preceded passage of the bill many senators took part and there were spirited passages. Senator Root, favoring the bill, said its great advantage would be the relief of laboring men from "the class of lawyers who are fattening on their misfortunes."

Senator Ashurst, of Arizona, referring to Mr. Root's speech, said he "could not understand why an attorney for the railroads would be in favor of the bill." Mr. Ashurst declared he made the reference because Senator Root had "looked at him" when he spoke of lawyers who had litigation in state courts against railroads being adverse to the bill.

Senator Reed, who led the long fight against the measure, declared that hands of organized labor had not fairly represented their orders in giving endorsement to the bill.

INDICTED FOR MURDER.

Rushville, Ind., May 7.—Paul Harris was indicted by the county grand jury today on the charge of murdering his mother, whose charred body was found in the burning ruins of her home on the Davis farm near here several weeks ago. The Harris property was in Mrs. Harris' name and she had made a will dividing the estate between her son and her husband upon her death.

In the absence of the elder Harris, it is alleged, the son struck down his mother and set the house afire. A blood stained rug upon which, it is charged, Mrs. Harris fell, was exhibited in the grand jury room.

OHIO NEXT BATTLE-GROUND FOR TAFT-ROOSEVELT WAR

vote played an important part in the result, since they say much of it would have gone to Gov. Wilson if the Ohio governor had not been in the race.

Roosevelt and Clark. This means that both Roosevelt and Clark will take from Maryland to the national conventions a solid block of 16 votes. The republican delegates chosen at the primaries will name 16 delegates to Chicago at the state convention May 14. The democratic state convention on May 16 will select 32 national delegates each with half a vote.

Though the Taft forces claim that they will control the personnel of the state convention, Col. Roosevelt's friends declare they have no fear that trouble may result from this situation. They point out that the state delegates elected are bound by the law to instruct the delegates to the national convention for Roosevelt and they express confidence that now the fight is over the two factions into which the contest divided the party will unite to place a delegation behind Col. Roosevelt that will remain faithful to him at Chicago as long as he has a chance of getting the nomination.

Vote Was Rather Close.

Estimates today of presidential preferential vote of the state gave Roosevelt a majority over Taft of less than 4,000. Clark's plurality in the city of Baltimore over Gov. Wilson was about 12,700 and the vote in the counties when it is counted is expected to reduce this to a total of 11,000 for the state as a whole. The state preferential vote had no direct bearing on the result but the Roosevelt and Clark campaign committees were none the less pleased that it went for their candidates, since they believe it will make the preference by counties through which the state delegates are instructed all the more to militate against the possibility that the delegations to the national convention will not stay hitched if the light there is very close. The law demands that the Maryland delegations continue to vote as instructed as long as in their conscientious judgment they believe their candidate's have a chance of getting the nomination.

GIVES WILSON MAJORITY.

Columbia S. C., May 7.—Reports from 41 of the 44 counties in the state show that in the county conventions held Governor Woodrow Wilson was endorsed as the democratic candidate for president in five, while five others instructed their delegates to vote for him at the state convention to be held May 16. This gives Wilson a nucleus of votes in state convention while those counties which endorsed him are expected to add 48 more.

NEVADA FOR TAFT.

Fallon, Nev., May 7.—The republican state convention yesterday named these six delegates to the national convention and instructed them for Taft: Senator George S. Nixon, Congressman E. Roberts, H. V. Morhouse, R. D. Govan, W. Williams and M. Bent. The vote instructing the delegates stood 80 to 17.

WILSON EASY IN TEXAS.

But the Taft-Roosevelt Contest is Still an Open One.

Dallas, Texas, May 7.—Texas democrats and republicans met in county conventions today to take the second step indicating their choice among Gov. Wilson, Gov. Harmon and Champ Clark; and between President Taft and Col. Roosevelt as presidential candidates. The first move was made in Saturday's precinct conventions. Wilson apparently is an easy first choice on the democratic side. The Taft and Roosevelt contest is still an open one. The conventions are scheduled for at least 243 out of 249 counties.

Chief interest centers in the question whether an attack will be made on the apparent landslide by which Wilson won in Saturday's conventions. Unofficial and incomplete returns indicated that his followers would have the controlling voice in a sufficient number of county conventions today to assure the New Jersey governor more than a majority of the 624 votes in the state convention.

Campaign managers of Governor Harmon and Champ Clark do not concede defeat and promise a vigorous contest today. The first county that reported today was Willbarger. The two democratic delegates to the state convention were instructed for Clark. The one republican delegate was instructed for Taft.

In the republican ranks Saturday's convention accomplished little more than organization. The republicans are entitled to 252 votes in their state convention, according to Republican National Committee Cecil Lyon. Numerous Texas counties are so sparsely settled that the democrats some times polled only 15 to 20 votes at a general election and the existence of republicans in such counties is said to be negligible. It is probable there will be no republican conventions in many counties.

THREATEN JUDGE'S LIFE.

Anonymous Letter Is Sent to Kalamazoo Jurist.

Kalamazoo, Mich., May 7.—Judge F. E. Kauffman who, a few days ago ordered the arrest of nine strikers alleged to have violated an injunction against picketing the corset factory where a strike is in progress, has received a letter threatening his life. The letter, which was dated Chicago, May 4, follows:

"Judge F. E. Kauffman: Sir: This is to warn you that if you try in any way or in any degree to punish members of the corset makers union for violating the injunction you had better arrange with the undertaker for your funeral, and we will see that a corpse is furnished at an early date. OBJECT LESSON WAS ENOUGH

After the Illustration Mrs. Jones Was Able to Understand Just How It Happened.

Mr. Jones believed that no one need ever fall down. It was pure carelessness, he said. Anyone who walked straight, and did not dawdle round, was in no danger of losing his balance. He said so to Mrs. Jones many times, but she only smiled in a provoking way.

One bitter cold January morning he changed his mind. Everything outdoors had a coating of ice. The path leading from the barn to the house was smooth as glass and slanted treacherously on either hand. On one side of it was an old cellar, where the house had once stood. Jones was coming from the barn, after doing the morning chores, with a pail of milk in each hand. He was just opposite the cellar when—zzzt!—out flew his feet and down he went on his back. The next instant he had slid in a shower of milk over the edge of the cellar hole, and landed on the bottom with a thump that fairly took away his breath.

He looked round in a dazed way for a moment, and then crawled to his feet. After making reasonably sure that none of his bones were broken, he climbed out and went limping into the house to tell his wife.

"Matilda! Matilda!" he called.

"Come out here!"

Obediently she came. "Why, Hiram, what has happened? Are you hurt?" she exclaimed, startled.

"Yes," answered Jones. "I fell down that old cellarway. Come here and I'll show you."

Mrs. Jones followed her husband gingerly.

"See, Matilda," he said, as he reached the spot and turned, "I stood right here like this when—"

Once more Jones's feet flew up, and in precisely the same manner as before he landed in the bottom of the cellar. Silence reigned while Mrs. Jones gazed at the spot where her husband had stood. Then she saw his head appearing over the top of the bank.

"Hiram," she said, "you needn't explain any further. I understand exactly how it was done."

But Hiram's answer was a thoroughly ill-tempered grunt—YOUTH'S COMPANION.

The children enjoyed playing games for a while and after that they were invited to march to the supper table. There were plenty of good things to eat, including ice cream and the birthday cake which had Evelyn's name and age dotted over its frosted top in red candy. Everyone had a beautiful time and gave Miss Evelyn many good wishes for more happy birthdays to come. Misses Lena Huxoll, Ada Kemp and Marie Scheib assisted in serving the supper. There was a beautiful but simple home wedding today at noon at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Vay Buren Perrine when their daughter, Miss Edna May, became the bride of Mr. Daniel Numbers Beers, only son of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Beers. The members of the two families with a few old family friends were present. Rev. H. B. Masferrer, of the First Presbyterian church, performed the ceremony. Neither bride nor groom were attended as the wish of both was to have the service as quiet as possible. After the marriage and the exchange of felicitations the wedding party was served at luncheon at small tables. The rooms were charming in decorations, though nothing was elaborate. Killarney roses, apple blossoms and the lovely daisies were the flowers used in the parlors and library. The bride and groom stood in front of a grouping of palms and wall cases filled with daisies and pink roses hanging against the curtains of the window. Baskets and vases of roses and daisies were effectively grouped on top of bookcases and mantels and plumose partially hid the chandeliers. The bride's table was decorated with a bowl of bridesmaid's roses and their lovely tint seemed a reflection of the brighter Killarneys. On each table stood a small white vase of various kinds of flowers, roses, forget-me-nots and mimosaes. After the luncheon the bride and groom left in an automobile for a southern trip. During their absence Mr. and Mrs. Beers will visit school friends of the bride in Nashville, Tenn. For traveling the bride wore a dark blue cloth suit and motor hat and veil. They will be gone two or three weeks on their trip. The wedding announcement will surprise many friends of the bride and groom as in deference to their wishes no previous announcements were made. The bride is one of the best known members of the younger society circles and her frank and genuine nature and attractive personality have endeared her to all who know her. Mr. Beers was graduated from Case School of Applied Science at Cleveland and is now secretary and treasurer of the Beers-Offutt Construction company, one of the successful and popular young business concerns of the city. Both bride and groom are members of prominent families both in business and society. All the Big Cities Are One Night Stands for This Notable Tour

One of the greatest of theatrical attractions and one novel in its way as well which has left New York after completing a sensational successful engagement at the Broadway theater is the Weber and Fields Jubilee company. This company notable for its members is to make only one night stands. Wherever the company plays the entire production will be seen absolutely intact and the engagement in any city will be the most important theatrical event of many seasons.

The list of principals includes such theatrical celebrities as Lillian Russell, Fay Templeton, William Collier, George Reban, Frankie Bailey, Bessie Clayton, John T. Kelly, Helena Collier, Garrick, Ada Lewis, and Weber and Fields, not forgetting to mention the customary three score beautiful girls, always such a feature with the old Weber and Fields companies.

The entertainment to be presented is a delightful medley of out-and-out musical comedy and travesty entitled "Hokey Pokey," and contains a screamingly funny burlesque on the current Metropolitan success, "Bunty Pulls the Strings," called "Bunty Pulls and Strings."

The entire production is staged with exceptional lavishness and is fittingly described as an entertainment de luxe. The largest cities in the country will fare no better, inasmuch as the Weber and Fields company will play in no place for more than one night. For the special tour such centers of population as Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Washington and St. Louis become "one night stands."

The organization will travel in its own special train and the members will only leave their traveling hotel when theater time arrives. In addition to the allotment of baggage cars and Pullman sleepers required to transport the members of the organization and the scenery, two private cars for the use of the principals and a number of invited guests will form part of the railroad equipment.

In the Kitchen and the Pantry

A new way to cook macaroni is called "Napoli" and is one of the most palatable ways of preparing this delightful food. With it a very light meat, preferably some form of the croquette, is best. Stuffed celery is one of the newest salad dainties, and sponge cake is a dessert recommended to the hurried housewife.

Scrub and trim as directed, set in a hot oven in an old baking pan or on a grating, have the oven very hot at first, then decrease the heat and bake until they are soft and yield readily to pressure. This will require about forty-five minutes or longer, according to the size of the potatoes.

Macaroni Napoli.
Cut four thin slices of bacon into small pieces, fry and strain off the hot fat. Set into a saucepan. Add three-fourths of a can of tomatoes, one sliced onion, one-fourth teaspoonful each of mace and allspice, one-eighth teaspoonful of cayenne and a bit of bay leaf. Bring to the boiling point, simmer one hour and season with salt and pepper. Add cooked macaroni or spaghetti cut into two-inch pieces (of which there should be two cupsful) and cook until the macaroni is thoroughly heated. Serve very hot.

Stuffed Celery.
Select tender but fair sized stalks so curved that the stuffing is possible. Mash and stir Roquefort cheese to a cream, putting through a ricer, if necessary. Add thick cream until a paste is made. Fill the hollows of the celery and put the mixture in the icebox to chill. Serve with the salad or as a salad, with French dressing, when desired. When served as a relish it is served without dressing.

Sponge Cake with Fruit.
Place a square of sponge cake, on a dish and put over any fruit on hand, either fresh or canned. Serve with whipped cream. This makes a delicious and pretty dessert when served with fresh crushed strawberries and their juice.

HINTS ON HEALTH

Noted Medical Expert Writes of the Spring Tonic.

In the spring the thoughts of many people turn to "blood purifiers" as naturally as the young man's fancy turns to thoughts of love. So they go out and buy a lot of patent tonics, mostly made of bad whiskey and bitter herbs, and take several dollars' worth.

The net result is generally a hole in the patient's bank roll. It seldom has any effect on the blood, except possibly indirectly through the influence of medicine on the stomach, an influence that is generally bad.

For there is no such thing as "impure" blood: in the sense implied by the use of "blood purifiers." The arterial blood takes good care of itself and if any impurities get into it they are kicked out in a few minutes at the outside. So-called "blood poisons" are really due to the working of bacteria on the tissues of the body and these germs spread through the tissues and not through the circulatory system. Even pimples and boils are due to infections of the skin.

The only "spring medicine" the average person needs is a change of diet to conform to the gradual rise in the temperature. Eat less meats and fats and more green stuff.

As a great many colds in the head come from getting the feet chilled, it is the height of folly to wear pumps or low shoes while braving the treacherous atmosphere of these first spring days. Even if you wear spats, and it is nine chances to one that you do not, the cold is sure to creep in, and before you know it your dainty feet are as cold as ice.

This habit has sent many women to their graves, and the fact cannot be impressed upon you too deeply that pneumonia follows closely in the train of the foolish woman who flutters over the cold pavement with shoes no thicker than paper. Don't do it.

Drink Plenty of Water.
Very few women drink sufficient water during the day to keep the body cleansed. The action of the skin also depends largely upon the supply of water taken into the system. Ten

MISS EDITH NICKELL AS PEPITA IN TITLE ROLE IN "THE ROMANY MAID."

Since the Merry Widow jolted America into a new view point upon musical offerings, everyone and his wife have been striving to duplicate the magical success which the famous waltz secured for the production. Especially has the "made in Vienna" stamp become well known to our jaded palates, even to the degree of making them rather more so—in fact, the New York managers have gone on record in the statement that the comic opera, which hangs alone or principally upon a seductive waltz refrain, is depending upon a mighty slender thread. However, no light opera can exist without the people's dearest dance rhythm and in these days of strange and uncanny dance diversions, the waltz must be slow and clinging and exceedingly saccharine. And so Mr. Archer has provided such a waltz refrain for Pepita to sing in the Romany Maid, which receives its premiere next Tuesday at the Majestic. It is not easy to write a tune nowadays that combines popularity, musical value and has not been written before and Mr. Archer confesses that he wrote three and cast them into the waste basket before the right one came to him. The song is entitled "The Way of a Man With a Maid," and it captured the chorus immediately as Miss Nickell imparts to it the charm of her personality.

The seats for the opera are selling rapidly and the Apollo club will hold a sale for its subscribers only on Thursday of this week, the public reservation being on Friday.

glasses of cool water each day would be about the right amount, and if a woman is anemic and does not readily assimilate food she should dissolve a spoonful of sugar in each glass of water. This will secure excellent results. Sugar enters into the food very quickly, and so is an immediate nourishment and a tonic for the nerves as well.

Learn Not to Worry.
If you want to keep your youth and health learn not to worry, not to be depressed. Contentment will help every one to be better in health and, therefore, to be better looking.

Of course this is a rule which one finds most difficult to follow, for few people in this world are without worries and anxieties of some kind. But the thing to remember is that we must not brood over our troubles.

Worry saps the vitality from not only the one who gives into it, but from all who are near.

Learn, therefore, to face life bravely, and above all don't make trouble out of small or imaginary ills. Let each day take of itself, if possible. Be optimistic and cheerful, and you will keep young in looks and in spirits.

IN THE GARDEN.

A clever gardening woman found out a plan by which she surrounded her garden with some lovely lilac bushes at no cost whatever. She had friends, it is true, who provided her with clippings and ground shoots.

For those who are not so fortunate in their friends there is only the initial expense of buying one bush to secure the provision of many another in the future if the following hints are followed.

The clippings may be any length, say from six to eighteen inches, and the shoots may have roots or they may not. The clever gardening woman soaked her shoots in water for about a week before planting them, and then put them in the open ground in the spring of the year.

The soil, she knew, did not need to be especially rich, but had to be well loosened and well moistened.

She had great success with her clippings.

One day she tried the experiment of clipping off the top of a bush that was dying. She cut it all into the part that was still alive and for a week before planting she put it in water.

After planting she trimmed it down somewhat. Thus she not only saved her original bush, but had another that was equally strong and good.

Clippings will become blossoming bushes in about five years. The gardening woman is now happy in a grove, as she calls it, of fine white and mauve lilac bushes.

LACE IN THE HOME.

Not content with its supreme importance in our wardrobes and hat cases, lace this season is seeking to assert itself in the furnishing of our apartments.

And, by the way, there may be some curious law of compensation in the fact that at the same time we are gayly adopting what is practically furniture gimp for our dress trimmings, having with it cretonne for facings and something not unlike stamped upholstery velvet for trains and evening cloaks.

Cretonne curtains and chintz hangings, so admirable in the summer in our boudoirs or our bedrooms, are being made with an insertion of flit lace now bordered with cotton fringes now indiscriminately selected for their purpose or for adorning summer stuff are heavily trimmed with lace, reviving an old fashion which takes us back quite a number of generations.

If that white suit, long coat or dainty gown is soiled and wrinkled, send it to us. We guarantee to return it as fresh and clean as new.

A very young gentleman, after hearing some vigorous language from his father, called up his grandmother on the telephone and warned her: "You better come down to our house and see about the words your son has been using."

When Aunt Mimy, away down South in Dixie, was told that a man of her acquaintance, who had been convicted of murder, would be hanged, she considered the situation thoughtfully. "That's gwine be right tryin' on that feller," she concluded at last.

Bloom of Youth Now Easily Attained

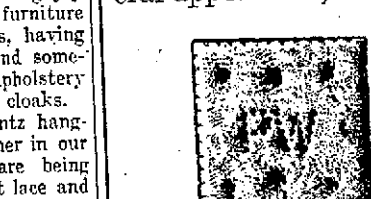

(From Popular Science.)
You no longer need to "doctor" that sallow, freckled, blackheaded, rough, blotchy, pimply or over-red skin. You can remove it, instead of vainly, painlessly, inexpensively. By a new scientific process which anyone can use without assistance, the dead and near-dead surface skin, with all its imperfections, is gently, gradually absorbed—and a radiant, youthful and beautiful complexion comes forth. Go to your druggist, get an ounce of pure mercurized wax, at night apply enough of this to completely cover the face; don't rub it in. Next morning remove the wax with warm water. The result after a few days is astonishing. You wonder why this secret wasn't discovered long ago.

Let the wrinkled, pouchy-cheeked, double-chinned folks also take hope. Put an ounce of powdered salicylate into a half pint witch hazel, bathe the face in this solution and—say!—there's nothing that will so effectively, so promptly, smooth out the hateful lines and draw in the sags and bags. You'll find this lotion, as well as mercurized wax, works equally well on neck and hands.

MAP SHOWING ROUTE OF FORT WAYNE AND TOLEDO INTERURBAN LINE, CONSTRUCTION WORK ON WHICH IS NOW UNDER WAY.

Work of grading for the new Fort Wayne and Toledo Electric railway started this week and large forces of men have been employed by the company in order to rush the right of way construction just as rapidly as possible. It is the intention of the company to have the Fort Wayne-Maysville division completed and cars in operation within ninety days. The structural work on culverts has been completed even beyond Maysville. General Manager R. T. Baatress is in charge of the work and

President E. A. Tamm, of Philadelphia, spent several days in the city looking over the situation. The new interurban road is one that is expected to prove successful in the most complete measure. It will travel through a territory rich in farming and the advisability of having such a line in operation through northeastern Indiana and northwestern Ohio has long been in the minds of the men who are backing the project. There is already an interurban connecting Toledo and Bryan, Ohio, and the new road will join the one already in existence in forming a complete electric railway from Fort Wayne to Toledo. The road will be constructed from this place and will leave Fort Wayne from Lake avenue, at the corner of Waldo avenue in Lakeside. In all only about fifty-five miles of track will be required to make the proposed connection and a branch line to Montpelier, Ohio, is included in this total. Connecting Points. Upon the completion of this line, connection will be made with lines connecting the following important points: Toledo, Sandusky, Findlay, Lima, Springfield, Hamilton, Cleveland, Findlay, Tiffin, Columbus, Dayton, Cincinnati, Ohio; Fort Wayne, Logansport, Muncie, Terre Haute, Kokomo, Noblesville, Columbus, Jeffersonville, Indianapolis, Wabash, Lafayette, Crawfordsville, Tipton, Franklin, Seymour and New Albany, Indiana; Detroit, Michigan; Louisville Kentucky, and Chicago. The population of the counties through which the lines will traverse totaled 309,000 at the last census. The country served is unsurpassed in fertility and is greatly in need of transportation facilities, a large section being now without steam or electric railway service. The direct population served is estimated at 1,000 per mile, and the indirect population 2,000 per mile additional. Construction. The line will be located principally on private right of way. The overhead construction will be first class in every way and substantial substations will be built along the line. Modern interurban cars will be operated, according to the officials, and hourly service will be established as soon as the line is open for traffic. Aside from the passenger accommodations, cars will be provided for light freight, mail and express business.

An important feature of the company's business will be the through travel between terminal cities and as this travel is being rapidly developed by all interurban lines of the country and as this line connects with two of the most important lines in the cities named, it is believed by the owners that the volume of business can be developed to an enormous extent under capable management.

In financing the road it was decided to limit the bond issue to $18,000 per mile of track. The amount of bonds required to build the entire system on the basis planned by the officials will amount to about $1,000,000 and the capital stock of the company, on the same basis, will be a like amount. The company, it is announced, has not issued any preferred stock.

The financial showing of the road, based on the estimates in the hands of the company, allowing 60 per cent. for operating expenses, will be as follows: Gross earnings, 55 miles at $5,500 per mile, $302,500; operating expenses, 60 per cent., $181,500; net earnings, $121,000; annual interest on $1,000,000 of bonds at 5 per cent., $50,000; surplus, $71,000.

IMPRESSES THE OFFICE BOY

Chicagoan Enthusiastic Over Scheme Which He Claims Is Great Success in New York.

Gerald Jones came here from Chicago. Consequently there are a number of things about New York which he compares with the same things in Chicago—much to the disadvantage of New York. One that chiefly irritates him is the office boy habit here, the Cincinnati Times-Star's New York correspondent writes. Gerald Jones enters the office of a friend of his. A small, cynical boy meets him at the mahogany rail. Mr. Jones declares that he wishes to see his old college pal, P. Norval Smith. The small boy demands a card, and hands him a blank form. "Write here what you want to see him about," says the small boy.

Mr. Jones protests. What he wants to see Smith about is something that he does not propose to confide to any small boy in the world—especially to a small boy toward whom he feels a sentimentally approaching hate. He waves his hand. He directs the small boy in a lordly way to take his name and be quick about it, and never mind the card. "Just say Jerry Jones is here," he says to the small boy. The small boy puts back the hunk of gum and sits down on his slippery little bench and indicates with an air of finality that there will be nothing doing until he gets the card he asked for and the full history of Mr. Jones' recent past. If Mr. Jones gets in to see P. Norval Smith it is only by assenting to the terms made by the small boy. Therefore, Mr. Jones has had a fresh set of cards printed for use upon the office boys of his friends. They bear the most awe inspiring names—Jim Jeffries, for example, and James J. Corbett and Packey McFarland and Cut Throat Jenkins, the terror of the gulch. He observes that the small New York boy is not well posted upon the life and crimes of Bloody Hand Ben, the scourge of the Sierras, but every one of them knows all about the men of the ring. "And tell that old fool Smith," he bellows, in the character of Tom Sharkey, "that if he doesn't come out here I'll beat him to death."

Gerald Jones is perfectly happy. He knows how to circumvent the office boy.

NEVER FORGOT ITS ENMITY

Colt's Repugnance to Calf Grew Until It Included Every Species of the Bovine.

On a stock farm near Syracuse, N. Y., a calf and colt were born on the same day. So soon as it was old enough to run about the calf resolutely repudiated its Jersey mother and insisted on being fed by the mare. Regularly every morning the calf would watch its chance for breakfast when the colt was kicking up its heels at the other end of the pasture, and would hurry to the good-natured mare, who seemed to develop a real affection for her foster baby and was quite willing to mother it. To this, however, her own offspring strenuously objected. So soon as it observed the calf enjoying the nourishment which it considered its own exclusive right, the colt would charge on the interloper and, grabbing it firmly by the back of the neck, would yank it away from the maternal fount and take its place.

So, far from forgetting its youthful enmity for the calf, the colt has grown up hating everything bovine. The farmer has had to erect a high fence dividing the pasture, and to keep cows and horses separated. The colt often will track in every way, goes wild with rage at sight of a cow, and attacks her with hoofs and teeth. For this reason it is impossible to drive him in the country, and his owner is even obliged to stable him in a building remote from sight and sound of the coward.

Coffee Hurt You?

No need to get mad now, tear up the paper or shout "nonsense, good coffee never hurt anyone."

You know better than that, for you can point out, all around you, folks who are the worse for coffee's slugging. Think over a few coffee-drinking friends and casually inquire if they are entirely and perfectly well and just how coffee treats them.

If it hurts others, isn't it just possible?

Catch the drift, don't you?

In fact, after having studied the matter a bit it will come plain that if you are a coffee-drinker the chances are that some form in incipient or perhaps fixed organic disease due to coffee has set in—constipation, rheumatism, eye trouble, nervous headaches, nervous prostration, or others of the well-proven coffee ills. BASEBALL

SHIFT IN BATTING ORDER GAVE VANDAGRIFT A START

Has Been Hitting in Good Form Since
He Was Advanced to the Sacrifice
Hit Position.

A shift in the batting order that sent Vandagriff to second place because he can bunt and is a good player to work hit-and-run plays with the man ahead of him has apparently done the little second baseman a world of good, as he has been hitting the ball regularly and has departed radically from his former habit of pulling the ball to left field for singles of the Texas league days.

Yesterday he landed three times in as many times at bat and in each instance drove the ball to a different field, and one of his hits went for a double. It also sent in a run and, aside from his hitting, he was a factor in the offense, handling everything that came his way.

Manager Francis Joseph Shaughnessy and his big war club counted in the game. The first time the tall leader was at bat he hit in Blount who had stopped a shot with his pistol pocket and who had advanced on Vandagriff's hunt. In the second inning he put one over on the right field bank that sent in two runs and the third time he went to second while Vandagriff, who had been down on a grounder to short, stole third and scored while Bill Clancy was being retired at first.

Bill Goldrick started in against Aggie Grant's Hotchkiss and after runs and hits, he settled down and held the invaders safe for a couple of innings and then something went wrong with his rubber and he began to founder and was yanked after he had passed a couple of men. Belersdorfer, who was looked before he had started, got in the last game he had completed, an "S. O. S." and hustled in from the childhood of the club house where he had been warming up and he checked the hustling Tots, allowing but one hit while he held the mound.

Ray Keener, who has been in a bad batting slump for a few days, broke in with a hunt that enabled him to score a run. He added a stolen base to his record and lapped a run by a nice slide at the plate.

Tenwerth Blount demonstrated his worth as a lead-off batter when he hit Alberts for a pass and during the course of the preliminary scored three of the six runs gained by the Billkins. In the third inning Grant popped a fly over to the grandstand and everybody yelled at McLaughery that he couldn't get it, but the third baseman had the idea of his own mind and he nabbed it, making one of the best plays of the year.

Fred Alberts had most everything but support. He looks better than he has in a long time and he was burning them across yesterday like it was mid-summer. His change of pace worried the local batsmen.

When Belersdorfer was sent in Manager Grant pulled Ollie Pickering out of center field and sent "Bubbles" Hargrove to take his place, because the latter can hit better against a left hander.

Grant was out on the line all the time, keeping his men warm up all the time. He puts lots of life in the game, which was one of the best exhibitions staged on the local lot this season.

Things broke badly for Goldrick in the first and he got in a hole. He had hit to center field and he was sent down to first. This gave him an extra base and also sent Snyder to third and he scored on a sacrifice fly.

Somebody in the second base pulled one over on Clancy. He stole the base clean and the ball got away from Martin. Either Vandagriff or Fabrique told him it was a foul and he started back to first and was tagged out before he regained his bearings.

TERRE HAUTE TEAM REPRESENTS WIDER RANGE OF PLAYING EXPERIENCE THAN ANY OTHER IN CENTRAL LEAGUE.

Ollie Pickering has had an experience of twenty-two years in baseball and Sharry is just out of college for his first year as a professional, and no other team in the league has members representing such a wide range of experience in the national pastime.

Ollie Pickering has been one of the stars of the game and time is doing for him what it will do for everybody, not only in baseball, but in all walks of life. It is showing him up, but he is a hitter and has a good head and is valuable to the team in the league has members representing such a wide range of experience in the national pastime.

MASON MEETS HIRSH

Are the Cincinnati Reds going to keep up their wonderful stride and win the National league pennant?
If they do the craziest baseball city in the country will go stark mad.
And Hank O'Day, famous umpire, but now manager of the Reds, will be king in Cincinnati.

For a quarter of a century it has been the custom in Cincinnati to look on the team as a sure pennant winner in March and go into deep mourning immediately after the opening of the season.

This year it's different. At this writing the Reds have lost next to no games. They are in top place, high above every body else. And ex-umpire Hank O'Day has done it with practically the same team that finished a dark and dismal sixth last fall.

O'Day took the team with the understanding that he was to be THE boss. And O'Day is THE boss.

First thing put up to him was a demand that he let Catcher Larry McLean go. Larry is one of the star catchers of the country, but hard to handle.

"McLean stays," said O'Day. "I can handle him."
The big catcher has been in every game so far this season and is playing phenomenal ball.

O'Day put the Reds through the most rigid spring work a team ever went through. He had his players on the ball field at Columbus, Ga., and other southern cities twice a day, good or bad weather.

"This ball club is going to be in shape when the bell rings," Hank would say. Then he'd look at the sky and say, "Well, the grounds are pretty wet, but we'll play around the edges."

O'Day made his pitchers strengthen their bodies and lungs first.

"There won't be any pitchers on this club who will be too exhausted to pitch after they have run from first to third base," said Hank. His pitchers run hard, mile track twice a day, then chased flies in the outfield. Their pitching arms were given secondary attention.

O'Day, as an umpire for twenty years, always had to decide matters quickly and sternly, and did not change when he became a manager.

The Reds at first resented Hank's iron mitt and his method of driving them in the spring, then they began to like it. Now they'd do anything for Hank.

The Red found that while O'Day is something of a "bear" in his ways, he has a big heart. When a player was hurt, O'Day saw that he got the best of attention and got it in a hurry. Time and again during the training season Hank was invited to theaters and big dinners and every time he refused.

"No, thanks; the boys have to eat at the hotel and I'm going to eat there, too."

O'Day is a great believer in the old one-run game. "Get one and it takes two to beat you," is his motto. He put Bullet Bescher, the best base runner in the National league, at the top of the Red batting order, and sent Bates, one of the best sacrifice hitters, up second.

Then he filled in with Dick Hoblitzel, a demon in a pinch, and Mike Mitchell, who with Hoblitzel, batted in more runs than any man in the league last season.

Then the Reds, under strict orders from O'Day, began to go after runs in the first inning. And they got them. And won games that way.

O'Day has won most of the Reds' victories.

BEES AT WORK ALL THE TIME

In Many Localities There is No Closed Season for Those In-defatigable Laborers.

On any sunny day, the bulk of their work is done by the first of November and they have retired for their winter's sleep. The beekeeper must now put cushions into the tops of the hives, taking only what honey he is sure can be spared by the bees, and leave them for their hibernation.

In Florida there is no such work to do, says a writer in Outing. "The bees work all winter, and they have as good feed in February and March as they do in July. The orange orchards are alive with the honey gatherers, and their buzzings blend into almost a roar in March, for that is when the orange flowers are open; but it must be confessed that the honey has a twang, something like the acidity of an orange, and it does not compare at all with that made from the bass-wood.

Besides the orange there are successive flowerings of legumes of all sorts all the year, every one having a positive flavor and very few of them giving to honey a familiar flavor. Yet Florida is a natural home of the bee, and honey in the southern states will yet become as familiar a product as cane sugar.

In the Mississippi valley and elsewhere where professional beekeepers carry their hives to the south to meet the coming of the flowers early in the season, turning around toward the north and carrying them to gather the later sweets from later flowering apples and berries. In this way, or by carrying them up and down mountain sides, the feeding spells on clover or basswood and other trees can be greatly lengthened.

A pet woodchuck at the house of Johnnie Hughes, of Cascade, Pa., catches mice and rats with the success and agility of a cat. It was its association with a rat that taught the chuck to become a "cat."

The eye of the animal and its scent appear to be more acute than even a cat's. It will lie for half an hour at a rat hole and wait for the rat to appear. It is generally sure death to the rat when the chuck makes a dive.

Chester Scarlet Dies After Illness of Several Months.

SAW CITY IN 1836

After suffering from a complication of diseases for more than eighteen months, Chester Scarlet, one of the oldest residents of Fort Wayne, died at 11:25 o'clock Monday night at the family residence, 1412 North Harrison street.

CHESTER SCARLET,
Pioneer Fort Wayne Citizen Who Died
Monday Night.

"Squire Scarlet, who was a former justice of the peace, first saw Fort Wayne seventy-five years ago, when he was a lad of three or four years of age, passing through this section with his parents en route from Ohio to their new home in Noble county, Indiana.

Mr. Scarlet was born September 1, 1832, seven miles east of Springfield, Ohio, and came to Fort Wayne to reside when he was sixteen years of age. He and his brother, John, who was then a traveling salesman for the firm, later Mr. Scarlet took a position as clerk in the Pennsylvania freight office and after a short time was made ticket and freight agent for the company at Lima, Ohio, where he remained eight years, retiring on account of ill health.

After returning to Fort Wayne Mr. Scarlet was elected justice of the peace and served faithfully in that office for eight years and at the expiration of his final term he engaged in the real estate and loan business, following that vocation until his last illness.

Mr. Scarlet and Miss Elizabeth Becker of this city, were united in marriage October 3, 1858. The widow, with one daughter, Rose, survive. Mr. Scarlet was long a member of the congregation of the First Methodist Episcopal church and served on the official board of the church for many years.

Was Cabin Boy.

In 1832 "Squire Scarlet, like many others, got the gold fever and went to California. After going to the golden west, Mr. Scarlet contracted illness and was forced to return to Indiana. He came to Fort Wayne and took a position as cabin boy on one of the old canal boats that passed through here. That was in 1853 and the "Squire was working on the packet "Golden Gate," a passenger boat which traveled from Lafayette to Toledo. Mr. Scarlet spent but one season on this boat and the next year obtained employment as cabin boy on a line of packets plying between Lafayette and Terre Haute.

Mr. Scarlet was 79 years of age at the time of his death. He was taken ill more than a year ago and since that time had been practically helpless.

WAR DEBT WORRY IS HEAVY BURDEN

Enormous Figure is Compared to Cost of Rural Community.

INCREASE IS RAPID

Washington, May 7.—The fear of war is consuming the homes of the rural and village populations of Germany, France, Great Britain, and the United States in a single generation, according to a bulletin from the school observance of peace day, which is soon to be issued for free distribution by the United States bureau of education. In discussing the cost of war, the bulletin says in part:

"War debt began with the nineteenth century. Not until the establishment of constitutional government had nations any credit in the world of finance. The bond of a king was notoriously bad security. Since 1800 the war debts of the nations have grown by leaps and bounds. That of Europe as a whole amounts to more than $26,000,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of $1,500,000,000 per year. All these 'endless' caravans of ciphers represent sums which have never been paid, will never be paid, can never be paid, so long as the present system of national armament goes on. For practically the entire amount now raised by taxation in civilized nations goes into the support of armies and navies. The United States, in splendid isolation from old entanglements, without an enemy in the world, and bonded by ties of blood and commerce to all civilized nations, spends 73 per cent of her income in this way. The civil, or non-military, expenditures of Europe are so small as to be negligible. "At the present rate of expenditure the four countries of Germany, France, Great Britain and the United States will spend in the next 40 years, the life of one generation, for the support of armies and navies an amount sufficient to build twenty million country and village houses at an average cost of $2,500 each. With father, mother and four children in each of these houses they would furnish homes for one hundred and twenty millions of people, which is more than the total present population of these four countries living in villages and the open country. Thus the fear of war is consuming the homes of these great nations in a single generation.

"It is estimated that the total direct cost of the armies and navies of the world each year in time of peace is two and one-half billion dollars, which equals the total valuation of the wheat and corn crops of the whole of the United States."

The bureau of education's bulletin, which is entitled "Peace Day," contains schools of the occasion, which comes on May 18. The bulletin was compiled and in part written by Mrs. Fern Andrews, secretary of the American School Peace League.

PRIEST GETS $25 YEARLY.

Olympia, Wash., May 7.—"One Catholic priest at $25 a year," is the lowest salary of any of the 545 positions in state institutions covered by the pay roll for the year beginning April 1 this year, as just announced by the state board of control. The law requires that board April 1 each year to make up the pay roll for each institution under its control and this has just been done.

This priest is allowed for the Western Hospital for the insane at Shelton, which is also allowed "one minister at $5 a month," and 145 other employees and officers.

TRACTION HEADS ARE IN THE CITY

Colonel J. Levering Jones
Here for Spring Inspection.

OTHERS ARE COMING

Colonel J. Levering Jones, of Philadelphia, president of the Fort Wayne and Northern Indiana Traction company, with Messrs. Howard Henry and Hugh Pritchard, members of the executive board and secretary Henry Rainey, arrived in Fort Wayne this morning for the regular spring inspection of the company's holdings. The party will spend two days in Fort Wayne before going out over the different branch lines of the system, and next week will be joined by the other members of the executive board. At that time a business meeting will be held in Fort Wayne. "All of the improvements previously announced will be rushed through as rapidly as possible," said Colonel Jones. "My trip this time is purely for an inspection of the entire system and nothing new along the line of improvement to the company's property is in mind. At the meeting next week, however, with members of the board, the report of Vice President Robert W. Watson will be considered. Aside from that nothing but regular routine business will be transacted."

This is Mr. Jones' first visit to the city since the opening of the new terminal on West Main street, and he is pleased with the arrangements that have been made.

The improvements suggested at different times by officials of the traction company include the construction of a new terminal building in Fort Wayne, the erection of new freight stations at Fort Wayne, Bluffton, Wabash and Peru, the erection of new car shops in Fort Wayne and the purchase of pay-as-you-enter cars for the city lines. In view of the fact that since the company has opened a new terminal station here it is expected that the next work to be undertaken will be the construction of freight station, as the increased business along this line demands larger freight facilities.

Molly and Flo are busy drawing down the salary these days, and why shouldn't they? It's some achievement to become stars in a year like 1912. Molly was a slip of a girl when a friend said she had dramatic instinct. That settled it. She went on the stage. It was small parts for her at first, but when "Bunny Pulls the Strings" was put on in New York Miss Pearson got her chance and contributed a heap to what old-timers call "the sweetest play ever produced in New York."

And Flo? Well, she's only 20 now, but she's been trying at Broadway for six years. She got her chance in "The Talker" and her work was a revelation.

CONVENTION RATES TO BALTIMORE

Pennsylvania to Make Rate of $24.80 for Round Trip.

ENGINEER LEAVES FOR WESTERN TRIP

New Safety Device for Prevention of Accidents.

A rate of $24.80 for the round trip has been granted by the Pennsylvania officials to those from this city who desire to attend the democratic convention in Baltimore. About $46 per day will be charged for each Pullman car, and $6 a day for the privilege of parking within two blocks of the convention hall. At the above rate individuals can secure accommodations on board Pullmans during their stay in Baltimore at approximately $2 per day each.

While it may not be possible to secure enough people to charter an entire train, the above rate is such as to induce many local people to attend the convention.

NEW SAFETY DEVICE.

A. L. Ruthven, of Cleveland, is the inventor of a safety device designed to prevent collisions of railroad trains, both head-on and rear-end, and also prevent trains from running into an open switch or open drawbridge, or to collide at crossings.

"The system consists of both audible and visual signals, an automatic motive power controller and equipment to cause the present Westinghouse air brake system to be operated automatically," said Ruthven.

"Each locomotive also is equipped with a telephone whereby the engineer can communicate over the rails, even though the trains are running divided into alternate blocks with points in insulation at any suitable distance, similar to the automatic semaphore block system, which latter are about two miles apart.

"The cost of installing the system is far cheaper than the present method. Neither wires, poles nor semaphores are used, yet absolute protection is assured."

"HOW I FLEW THE CHANNEL"—DARING AMERICAN GIRL'S OWN STORY OF FEAT THAT STARTLED EUROPE.

[Editor's Note: Miss Harriett Quimby, an American girl, recently startled Europe by flying alone and unaided across the English channel. France and Great Britain have crowned her "Empress of the Air," and have given her precedence over all their birdwomen. Miss Quimby is a Californian by birth and a New Yorker by adoption. She is 24 years old.]

By Harriet Quimby.

Directly I took my seat in the Blériot I knew I would be all right—she was a beauty! I felt perfectly at home. I set my course over Dover Castle, and had my first surprise in a few minutes. When the machine rose everything was beautifully still and calm, but once over the castle and we ran into the most exciting gusty winds.

But I was up and away over the channel before they had time to do me any harm. And then it was high—ho, and me for Calais, as hard as I could pelt! The channel, no doubt, looked very fine, but I was not out for admiring the view just then.

I let the Blériot go for all she was worth, and then, "slap bang!" I hit a fog bank head on. In about ten seconds I hadn't the remotest idea where I was.

"I Was 2,000 Feet Above the Channel." Inset is a Picture of Miss Quimby.

I just couldn't go blundering on through that horrible fog, so I sent the Blériot up until I was 2,000 feet high.

Below me land suddenly appeared!

APPROVES RETIREMENT PLAN. Annuities for Government Employees at Age of 70 Years.

Washington, May 7.—President Taft has sent to congress a message approving the plan of the commission on economy and efficiency to retire all government employees at the age of 70 years on annuities equal to half salary with a maximum limit of $600.

The plan provides that employees entering the service after adoption of the superannuation plan shall make annual contributions to provide a retirement fund.

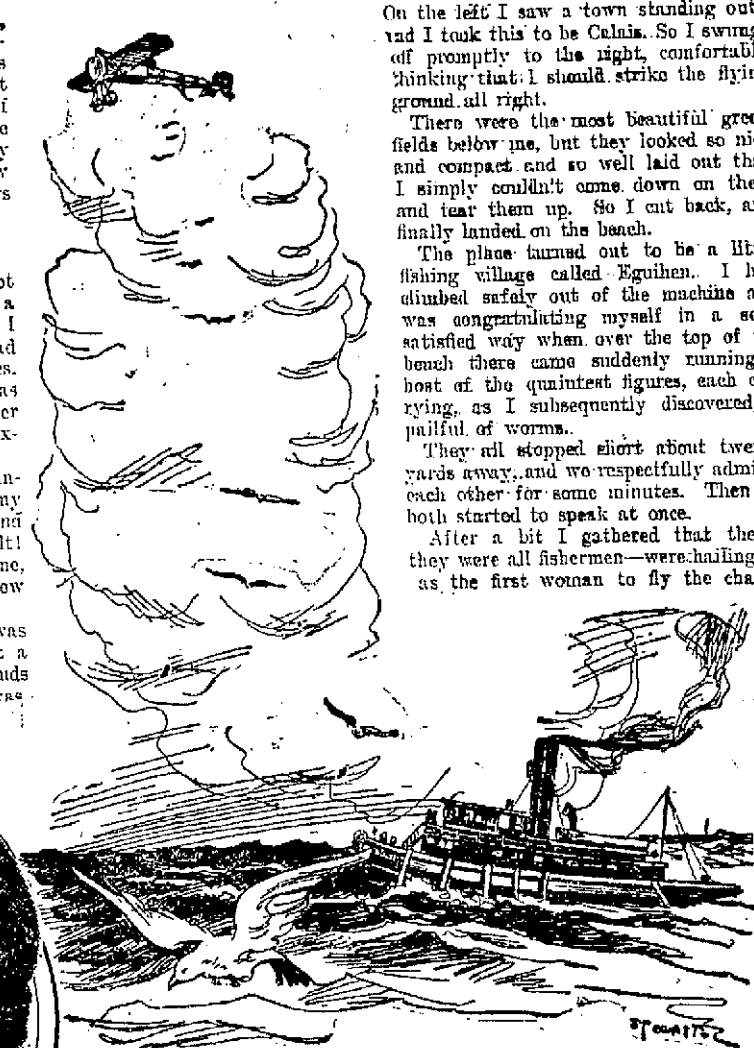

The commission estimates that the plan would cost the government $227,000 a year during the next twenty years, and that the saving during the succeeding sixteen years would equalize it.

Present employees would be assessed not exceeding 8 per cent. The government would contribute for employees who are nearing 70 years. Employees who leave the service could withdraw their deposits to the retirement fund with interest at 4 per cent.

GOES FOR FINAL SEARCH. Canadian Steamer to Seek Last of Titanic Victims.

Halifax, May 7.—The third ship to go in search for bodies of the victims of the Titanic disaster steamed out of Halifax harbor last evening for what is probably the last effort to recover bodies. The vessel is the Canadian steamer Montmagny. The ship came yesterday after having recovered seventeen bodies, two of which were buried at sea.

The provincial government has in its possession sums amounting to $70,000 which have been taken from bodies. The largest amount found on a single person was $16,500 found in the pockets of Col. Emil Brandeis, of Omaha, Neb.

SON GIVEN BULK OF ASTOR WEALTH

$5,000,000 to Young Widow

Reverts if She Marries Again.

EX-WIFE IS IGNORED

New York, May 7.—Counsel for the family made public last night the will of John Jacob Astor, as drawn in this city in September last only a few days after his marriage to Miss Madeline Talmage Force, and approximately seven months before he perished with the sinking of the Titanic. Vincent Astor, a son, who will come to age within the year, is made the principal beneficiary and residuary legatee.

No hint as to the value of the great estate is given and by the creation of trust funds the testator has followed, as far as possible, the custom of his forebears in keeping the vast Astor real estate holdings intact. Valuations of the estate run anywhere from $75,000,000 to $150,000,000. A close friend of the family said last night that the smaller figure, in his opinion, is nearer the correct estimate.

But One Gift to Charity.

Aside from provisions for Vincent Astor, the will provides for unconditional bequests of only $275,500. Among these there is but one of a charitable nature. This is $30,000 to St. Paul's school at Concord, N. H. The remainder of the legacies are to relatives, friends and faithful servants. Nearly all other provisions of the will, as made public, deal with the trust funds of which there are: $5,000,000 for the young widow; $5,000,000 for the colonel's young daughter, Muriel; the child of his former wife, Ava Willing Astor, and $3,000,000 for the expected posthumous child of the present widow. This latter clause provides for "each child who shall survive the testator other than his son William Vincent Astor and his daughter, Ava Alice Muriel."

Former Wife Is Ignored.

No provision is made for the wife who divorced him; and if the young widow dies or marries again the $5,000,000 trust fund, together with the town house and other property left to her, reverts to Vincent Astor. She receives, however, $100,000 outright without further stipulation; and until the income from the trust fund is directed to pay her an income of $200,000 a year.

There was an ante-nuptial settlement which she accepted in lieu of dower rights. The amount of this has never been made public. Rumors have placed it at $5,000,000.

Terrors of a Mexican Prison Told by American Refugee Who Escapes Half Dead from the Rebel Orozco's Clutches.

By T. K. Barton.

(An American Refugee from Mexico.) My experience in Mexico was terrible! I am 34. My home is in Marlin, Texas. My partner is John Anderson, an Englishman, from Boston, 25 years old. Two months ago, when we were in El Paso, we made up our minds to go to Mexico. We landed in Chihuahua in the evening.

The rebels held the town. We intended to get jobs in the lumber camp at Madera. A Mexican came up to us and told us to walk up some stone steps to the entry way of a bank, which was closed. After we got up on the stone platform he told us to lie down there and not to leave until a soldier came for us in the morning. He said we would be shot if we disobeyed. We slept on the stone that night.

In the morning a soldier took us to jail—an awful place. Andersonville prison could not have been worse. Not a prisoner was allowed to leave the one big room in which fifty of us were huddled. The floor was covered with indescribable filth. We spent five days in this room, with only a piece of bread and one glass of water each day.

On the sixth day they took us to the penitentiary and put us in stone cells. We wrote five different letters to Marion Fletcher, the American consul, but none reached him.

In the penitentiary we met Tom Brooks, a half-Mexican. I thought the half-American in him would outweigh the half-Mexican, and so told him our troubles. He said he would find an iron pick for us, to dig our way out of prison. Next day we found this pick in our cell.

We worked for two nights and dug a hole through the mud wall of the penitentiary, until we reached the stone facing of the outer walls. The next day we planned to push out a stone and get away. We told Tom Brooks good-bye that night.

That very night, to gain the friendship of the jailer, Brooks betrayed us. Four soldiers came in our cell at midnight, removed the blankets we had hung over the hole in the wall, saw what we had done and dragged us out to the solitary cells.

We spent five days in these cells without food or water. On the fourth day I was nearly insane, I guess. I yelled through the little hole in the heavy cell door, "poco agua," meaning water. A jailer came up to me and pointed to a puddle in the corner of the cell, saying "drink that."

On the morning of the fifth day I followed his advice. But an American in the jail had heard of our plight. His name was Smith and he was accused of forging a check for $3,000 somewhere in the United States. He was held by the revolutionists at the request of the American consul. Smith told Fletcher about us and Fletcher came to see us.

Our clothes were all gone; we had sold them for food in the jail. Fletcher got us some old clothes, and Anderson, with a needle and thread borrowed from a prisoner, made us each a cap out of gunny sacks.

"I'll have to send to Washington in your behalf," Fletcher told us, "but don't worry; I'll get you out." We found out afterward that Washington had demanded that Orozco release us.

On the morning of April 25 a jailer came to us and said: "Go away from here in a hurry; you are free."

He and some of the prisoners gave us about a hundred tortillas, which is Mexican bread; they are like pancakes. We ate, for we had eaten nothing for five days. That night we both slept in a field, desperately sick from too much food.

The next day we walked 25 miles toward the American border, 20 miles away. We came upon a freight train, and when we told the Mexican conductor our story he allowed us to ride on the beams. He was afraid to allow us to ride in a car for fear the revolutionists would catch him helping Americans.

When we reached the American side at El Paso, we were both weak, but we stood on the American side of the bridge and cheered like two crazy men.

Some other requests. Upon attaining the age of twenty-one the daughter is to receive this fund with its accumulations absolutely. In case of her death under twenty-one it goes, according to her will and in default of a will, then to her issue, if any, and in default of a will or issue surviving her, then, to William Vincent Astor.

6—A trust fund of $3,000,000 is created for the benefit of each child who shall survive the testator other than his son, William Vincent Astor, and his daughter, Ava Alice Muriel Astor, to be held in trust for such child until attaining the age of twenty-one years, with similar provisions as to the disposition of the fund in event of the death of the child under twenty-one as are above set forth in connection with the trust for the daughter.

Some other requests. Nicholas Biddle, of Philadelphia, who went to Halifax with Vincent Astor to claim Colonel Astor's body, receives a legacy of $20,000; Robert H. Ferguson, a close friend and a trustee of his father's estate, and now living in Silver City, N. Y., gets $10,000; Douglas Robinson, brother-in-law of Theodore Roosevelt, is bequeathed $20,000, and a similar sum goes to the testator's brother-in-law, James Roosevelt Roosevelt, of this city.

James S. Armstrong, of Rhinebeck, N. Y., a cousin, is bequeathed $30,000, a sum which Colonel Astor's father also left him. Other bequests are $25,000 to his secretary, William A. Dobbyn, of this city, recognition of faithful services; $10,000 to his steward, Thomas Hade, "in appreciation for his many years of devoted service" and $10,000 to Herbert A. Pinkham, superintendent of his country place at Rhinebeck.

The executors are directed to pay the New York Yacht club $1,500 a year until Vincent Astor shall become of age, this sum to be used by the club for the purchase of two silver cups to be sailed for by the yachts of the New York Yacht club at Newport, during the annual cruise. It suggests further that Vincent Astor, having arrived of age, shall continue to offer these prizes, thus perpetuating the famous Astor cup.

Named as executors are James Roosevelt, Douglas Robinson, Nicholas Biddle and Vincent Astor, upon the latter attaining the age of 21. These latter are also appointed trustees of the same are also appointed trustees of the will. The several trusts created by the will, September 18, 1911, in the presence of Lewis Cass Ledyard, Philip C. Brown and John F. Kane, as subscribing witnesses. It will be filed for probate in a few days.

There was no reading of the will to the assembled relatives. As soon as Colonel Astor's death became known to a certainty they were informed of the provisions of the document.

By the terms of the Astor will, Vincent Astor comes into possession, on his twenty-first birthday, on November 15, of nearly 150 parcels of New York city real estate. The aggregate value of these holdings, according to last assessment is $57,600,300.

The next day we walked 25 miles toward the American border, 20 miles away. We came upon a freight train, and when we told the Mexican conductor our story he allowed us to ride on the beams. He was afraid to allow us to ride in a car for fear the revolutionists would catch him helping Americans.

When we reached the American side at El Paso, we were both weak, but we stood on the American side of the bridge and cheered like two crazy men.

Some other requests. Upon attaining the age of twenty-one the daughter is to receive this fund with its accumulations absolutely. In case of her death under twenty-one it goes, according to her will and in default of a will, then to her issue, if any, and in default of a will or issue surviving her, then, to William Vincent Astor.

6—A trust fund of $3,000,000 is created for the benefit of each child who shall survive the testator other than his son, William Vincent Astor, and his daughter, Ava Alice Muriel Astor, to be held in trust for such child until attaining the age of twenty-one years, with similar provisions as to the disposition of the fund in event of the death of the child under twenty-one as are above set forth in connection with the trust for the daughter.

Some other requests. Nicholas Biddle, of Philadelphia, who went to Halifax with Vincent Astor to claim Colonel Astor's body, receives a legacy of $20,000; Robert H. Ferguson, a close friend and a trustee of his father's estate, and now living in Silver City, N. Y., gets $10,000; Douglas Robinson, brother-in-law of Theodore Roosevelt, is bequeathed $20,000, and a similar sum goes to the testator's brother-in-law, James Roosevelt Roosevelt, of this city.

James S. Armstrong, of Rhinebeck, N. Y., a cousin, is bequeathed $30,000, a sum which Colonel Astor's father also left him. Other bequests are $25,000 to his secretary, William A. Dobbyn, of this city, recognition of faithful services; $10,000 to his steward, Thomas Hade, "in appreciation for his many years of devoted service" and $10,000 to Herbert A. Pinkham, superintendent of his country place at Rhinebeck.

The executors are directed to pay the New York Yacht club $1,500 a year until Vincent Astor shall become of age, this sum to be used by the club for the purchase of two silver cups to be sailed for by the yachts of the New York Yacht club at Newport, during the annual cruise. It suggests further that Vincent Astor, having arrived of age, shall continue to offer these prizes, thus perpetuating the famous Astor cup.

Named as executors are James Roosevelt, Douglas Robinson, Nicholas Biddle and Vincent Astor, upon the latter attaining the age of 21. These latter are also appointed trustees of the same are also appointed trustees of the will. The several trusts created by the will, September 18, 1911, in the presence of Lewis Cass Ledyard, Philip C. Brown and John F. Kane, as subscribing witnesses. It will be filed for probate in a few days.

There was no reading of the will to the assembled relatives. As soon as Colonel Astor's death became known to a certainty they were informed of the provisions of the document.

By the terms of the Astor will, Vincent Astor comes into possession, on his twenty-first birthday, on November 15, of nearly 150 parcels of New York city real estate. The aggregate value of these holdings, according to last assessment is $57,600,300.

90 Days	27404.4	3.86	1322.925

Long live Banostine Belle DeKol, queen of the dairy, and thousands more like her, that each of us may have milk to drink and butter for our bread.

For, be it understood, Banostine Belle DeKol is some considerable cow. In fact, she is the best ever. While there is just one other cow with a better yearly milk quantity record, which isn't much better than Banostine Belle DeKol's, there is no cow with her record in butter fat production, and that is why she's queen of them all.

In one year she produced 27,404.4 pounds of milk, which would have made 132.0 pounds of butter, which is nearly four pounds a day. And she works on Sundays and holidays, too.

In that time she gave over nine gallons of milk a day, which would provide a quart a day for each of 36 families, and considering the butter fat in her milk 10 cents a quart would be cheap, making $3.60 a day, or a little over $25 a week. That's half as much as the governor of Nebraska gets, and more than any state pays its legislators. Probably the skim milk used in fattening other stock would pay for her keep.

CHILDREN LOVE SYRUP OF FIGS

Gently cleanses the stomach, liver and waste-clogged bowels.

Every mother immediately realizes after giving her child delicious Syrup of Figs that this is the ideal laxative and physic for the children. Nothing else regulates the little one's stomach, liver and 30 feet of tender bowels so promptly, besides they dearly love its delightful fig taste.

If your child isn't feeling well; resting nicely; eating regularly and acting naturally it is a sure sign that its little insides need a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When cross, irritable, feverish, stomach sour, breath bad or your little one has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, sore throat, full of cold, tongue coated; give a teaspoonful of Syrup of Figs and in a few hours all the foul, constipated, clogged up waste, undigested food and sour bile will gently move on and out of its little bowels without nausea, griping or weakness, and you will surely have a well, happy and smiling child again shortly.

With Syrup of Figs you are not drugging your children, being composed entirely of luscious figs, senna and aromatics, it cannot be harmful.

Mothers should always keep Syrup of Figs handy. It is the only stomach, liver and bowel cleanser and regulator needed—a little given today will save a sick child tomorrow.

Full directions for children of all ages and grown-ups plainly, printed on the package.

Ask your druggist for the full name, "Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna," prepared by the California Fig Syrup Co. This is the delicious, lasting, genuine old reliable. Refuse anything else offered.

That's what comes of keeping a good cow about the place.

Banostine Belle DeKol is an aristocratic cow; she's the daughter of Friend Hengerson DeKol Butter Boy. She is never dry and asks for no better treatment than any cow should get. She lives in Geauga county, Ohio, where she is the star of a noted Holstein-Friesian herd.

Transaction in English Country Store Caused Reflection on Part of Boston Woman.

Letting a boy buy eggs in an English country store brought home to a Boston woman the barbarian bluntness of her own townsmen.

"The boy was aged about six, and he wanted three eggs," she said. "Picture the transaction in a Boston store. In houses the boy, slaps down the money, and shouts: 'Gimme three eggs'; the tradesman answers 'All right,' or maybe nothing at all, and the deal is closed. Not so in that English store.

"Quietly the boy sidled up to the counter. From the other side a gray-haired grocer beamed upon him benevolently, and said, 'Thank you' inquiringly.

"Three eggs, if you please," said the boy.

"Thank you," said the grocer, and put the eggs into a paper bag.

"The boy received the bag with another 'Thank you,' and 'Thank you,' replied the grocer when he took the money. That required making change, which was effected with another interchange of 'Thank you's.' Just count the civilities: Six 'thank you's' and one of you please' to buy three eggs. In Boston you could do a week's marketing on less courtesy."

SHEATH GOWN AND FIGURES.

It Makes the Wearer Knock-Kneed and Ruins Her Appearance.

New York, May 7.—The sheath skirt and similar fashion atrocities of recent date are discussed in an article which Dr. Karl Franke, the eminent German scientist, has contributed to a Munich medical publication. The sheath skirt, he says, is ruining figures, stunting development and producing a race of knock-kneed women. The doctor says the limbs cannot be straight unless the muscles are allowed regular, unrestricted exercise, which is only possible with wide skirts. The time must come, says Dr. Franke, when it will be a crime to wear tight skirts.

Mrs. N. J. McKie, 470 Huntington St., Wabash, had severe kidney trouble, resulting from catarrh, which apparently poisoned her entire system. While at its worst she began taking Foley Kidney Pills and says: "They seemed to give immediately relief. The first few doses stopped the backache, and eventually cured the inflammation and strengthened the kidneys. I cannot recommend them too highly." Dreier Drug Co.

HAD 108 NEAR RELATIVES.

Hamilton, O., May 7.—Leaving seven children, thirty-three grandchildren, thirty-eight great-grandchildren and twenty-nine great-great-grandchildren, besides her husband, Mrs. Anna McClung, age eighty-nine, of near Monroe, died here. Her husband, James McClung, is ninety years old. The couple celebrated their seventieth wedding anniversary recently.

J. A. Shanks, Lewisburg, Ind., enjoyed a visit from his grandchildren. Both suffered from a severe cold and coughed at night. The medicine prescribed failed to stop their coughing so Mr. Shanks took the matter into his own hands and says: "I got a bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar Compound and after a few doses they went to sleep and slept throughout the night without coughing." PERFECT BABY NOW HEIRESS

Rich Couple, Childless, Find a Little One Without Taint.

SEARCH IS SUCCESS

Butte, Mont., May 7.—E. Creighton Largey, one of Butte's millionaires, and his wife, formerly Miss Dody Hancock, an actress, have adopted a baby girl after a search for "the right one," which lasted several months. The search extended to San Francisco, Chicago, New York, Boston and other cities, enlisted the services of physicians and was made at the expense of thousands of dollars.

They sought a little one physically perfect, who bore no hereditary taint and who, aside from being an orphan, had no living relatives and who was penniless.

The baby was found in New York through the efforts of a physician of that city. The name of the child is withheld and the adoption proceedings were made behind closed doors in court.

Largey was married to Miss Hancock four years ago. They are childless, and several months ago Mrs. Largey suggested that they adopt a child. Largey opposed the idea at first, but gave in to the pleadings of his wife. Then he held out for a boy.

Once again he gave in and consented to the adoption of a baby girl if the right one could be found. They began the search, which ended successfully.

The baby's father was killed in a railroad accident seven months before she was born and her mother gave up her life to bring the little one into the world. She has no living blood relatives and is now heiress to an estate valued at $1,000,000.

United States Land Office Celebrates 100 Years of Work

A century ago the government started the general land office, opening on May 7, 1812. They were a bit previous about starting, for congress didn't pass the law authorizing it until May 26th. However, Edward Tiffin, former senator and former governor of Ohio, became the first federal land commissioner. He had nine men working under him. Now Fred Dennett, of North Dakota, present commissioner, has over 2,000 employees; also the office costs us $3,000,000 a year.

The office had 1,849,072,087 acres of public land to dispose of when it began; took just 100 years to give to the railroads and sell to homesteading farmers 1,153,070,826 acres.

Walter L. Fisher, secretary of the interior, presides at the centenary celebration to be held in Washington May 7. The main band and others will furnish the music and the verbal fireworks.

Prof. Chas. W. Stewart, the very well known musician of Logansport, doctored for kidney trouble for many years and still was not relieved. A friend advised him to take Foley Kidney Pills, which he did. He says: "They acted promptly, my backache left me, I gained strength, appetite improved, kidneys strengthened, and action became normal. Foley Kidney Pills entirely cured me." Dreier Drug Co.

LAMB WAS MINUS MARY. Shelbyville, Ind., May 7.—The story of "Mary and Her Little Lamb" was partially carried out in this city few days ago, but instead of Mary owning this little lamb it was owned by Chris Reinecke, a butcher. The lamb went to the high school and, seeing an open door leading into the building, went into the corridor. Several girls happened to come along and the lamb gave chase.

Mrs. J. M. Henshaw, 235 S. 14th St., Richmond, had a severe pain in her back and other indications of kidney trouble. She heard of the curative qualities of Foley Kidney Pills and took them. She says: "I was entirely relieved from the backache, my kidney action improved, and I am now all over my trouble. I gladly recommend Foley Kidney Pills." Dreier Drug Co.

Lassiter

by
CHILD

HERE is, as you know, a cafe that spreads its tables out onto the sidewalks where, over an ice or a liqueur, one can see the band pavilion, the Prado and the Malecon with one eye-sweep. When the air is balmy, the sky above planted with stars, and the moonlight falls upon the grim romance of Morro Castle across the harbor mouth, it is pleasant to sit there, looking with a dreamy mind into the faces of the Havana parade of Cubans, negroes and Spaniards. These people are better artistic productions than ourselves. As for the Spanish women, in their Parisian finery and flick and flash jewelry, they have a way of suggesting sun-ripened fruit in cut glass. And when the Carnival is at its height, they know better how to play," said Miss Dorothy.

Her companion across the insignificant diameter of the little companionable table was none other than her friend, Martin Lassiter, who had been left alone with her for three reasons. The first was that old Cheever Finch, who sold out to the Steel Trust after he had lost the knack of living, and Mrs. Cheever Thorndike Finch, who had resigned her social leadership only when she had become weary of well ordered and well organized joy, were tired and wanted an excuse to use their eighteen-dollars-a-day suite in the hotel over the restaurant. The second reason was that Lassiter had three learned degrees, an appointment as full professor in psychology, a most desirable ancestry traced to the Lassiters of County Lassiter, who lived in a time long before the name Finch had been changed to Finch, and had proven, after test, that he would make love to the perfect daughter academically—which won't work. The third reason was that conventions are unnecessary in places where no one knows you.

So Martin, immaculate in white alpaca, sat there with complete happiness and with Dorothy of the golden hair and glowing health. There was the moon, the Carnival, the luxuriant, soft music, the laughter, the smell of flowers, the spinning past of motor cars, the languid roll of elegant broughams, he cared not for the hidden reasons why his mind, which had reached middle age twenty years in advance of his body, had allowed him to feel that all the mad joy of many universes were in the corners of her mouth, or tied by the strands of the hair above her white forehead. He cared not why he had even forgotten that she owned all the bonds of the Intra State & Western Railroad. He cared not that she knew little of learned matters, had no experience in wit beyond that kind which is bred at dances and functions, and had never learned to do anything useful. He cared not why. To the devil with psychology! He was in love!

He made up his mind that he would express this emotion then and there. He adjusted his glasses, playing with a little coffee cup with the white fingers of his other hand.

"I'm glad that we met here—that is, in Havana, at this time," he began.

Miss Finch opened her eyes—a delightful spectacle, especially in a soft evening light.

"Why, so am I," she said, for she liked Lassiter very much, his manners, his odd sense of humor and his brilliant intellect.

With a slight movement of her shoulders beneath the clinging material which covered them, "nevertheless, you seem to have forgotten me entirely. You have not been listening. I said I wished we Americans knew how to play—how to live."

"I beg your pardon," Martin stammered. "Yes—yes. You are right." He was a little taken back by the unworldly philosophical mood of the young lady.

"But spontaneity is, perhaps, an attribute of animals and children. Nations that can play are nations of peasants, of children, of animal spirits. There is something to be said for those people who do not know how to play."

"Not for mine," said Dorothy. Chicago is her home.

Martin allowed himself the delight of laughing patronizingly. The point of view of the girl was so refreshing and so young.

"Well," said Lassiter, resting her chin on the back of her hand, "why not? What do we gain by always being so dead in earnest about life—like mother and father. Why is everybody so crazy about getting a big store of something? Look at father. It's money. Look at yourself. It's learning. All right, if you can have a good time doing it. But I wish to be a child, a peasant, an animal—if it's necessary to know how to live. Here we sit. Well, let's join the parade and throw confetti!"

Lassiter's spirits wriggled sympathetically. He looked about at the noisy concourse on the Prado beneath the bobbing lights and then at his watch. It was nearly two.

"It's too late," he said with a tone of finality. "We are all going to breakfast with the Department Commander at ten. And besides—I think your mother expects us to stay here."

"There!" nodded Miss Dorothy. "There speaks a civilized man—a nice, highly civilized man—a man with manners and customs all cut out of the pattern book. If I couldn't be devilish, or foolish, or happy, I wouldn't want to live. What's the use. What's the use of thinking so hard about a dollar or a Ph.D. or a breakfast with a Department Commander. I'd rather be a peasant."

"Oh, well," said Martin, with a fluttering in his throat. "I have another reason. It's selfish. I wanted this moment here with you. There is ten years' difference in our ages. I mean by that—that it has been found that—What I wanted to say—"

"Wait!" Miss Finch leaned her little young body over the table. A glass rolled off onto the floor, tinkling into bits. The passersby turned and laughed at the music of it. "Wait, Martin," she said earnestly. "I know what you wanted to say. I could tell by your expression. I've seen it in other faces before. Eight other men—but I shouldn't have said anything about them. You see I like you. But the trouble is—I am not a complicated person a bit. I am elementary. But you aren't. That's the trouble. Just as I have been saying. We are totally different, I'm afraid. What did I say just now? Give me an elementary man. And I do not think you are an elementary man. Are you?"

"Very decidedly in my feelings."

"Toward me?"

"Yes."

"But all the bloom is off you, Martin," she said, attempting the easy manner of old friends. "Laughter and sunlight and things like daisies and anger and the fun of letting loose—once in a while—Oh, you are way beyond all of them. You're not a savage."

He looked back at her painfully, feeling convinced perhaps. That feeling of the stake lost, the prize beyond winning, the woman out of reach, is terrible. Bachelors through the ages have accumulated a vast amount of evidence in support of its claim to sharp pain.

"I'm sorry you reminded me of the breakfast," Dorothy said, after a thick vegetation of silence had grown up between them. "I suppose I ought to ask you to take me to the elevator."

Lassiter motioned to the waiter with his eyes, glasses held between his thumb and forefinger. It seemed to him in the moments of paying the check and walking with her through the tables and the palm bedecked courtyard, that the girl had never seemed so beautiful. The fish that breaks the hook is always the larger for having escaped. Martin felt like the typhoid fever. He has never been able to remember saying good-night to her; in fact, he only began to realize reality when he found himself standing on the edge of the sidewalk.

Chance played fast and loose then with the Blake Professor of Experimental Psychology. A hack—a good, old-fashioned, Kalamazoo-made hack—had just discharged its freight of evening-dress gentlemen and sparkling, scarfed ladies at the hotel door.

"My man," said Martin to the driver, "have you an engagement?"

The fellow on the box shook his head.

"You speak English?"

The driver nodded. Lassiter climbed in, adjusted his glasses on his forehead and placed his feet on the seat before him.

"Take me where there is trouble—trouble with a large 'T,'" he said savagely.

The driver wiped the edges of his hat on his coat sleeve, with perfect impudence he lit a cigarette, puffed it down in four Titanic inhalings and with four volcanic explosions of smoke. The horse's ears hung down. The Cuban snapped the stump directly over the animal's forehead. Then he turned around slowly and inspected his passenger. His deliberate manner was the more obvious because, though it is characteristic of his race, it is far from characteristic of his race.

"Would Senor wish to attend a riot?" he asked, starting his horse forward down the Prado.

"Yes—an explosion—fire—riot—anything! Is a riot in progress?"

"Soon."

"Soon!" exclaimed Lassiter in surprise. "How can one know that?"

The Cuban laughed at his passenger's ignorance.

"There is ten—twenty, many sailors of the United States ashore. From boat called the Coyote. Cruiser. It is Carnival, Senor. Some of the police off duty this afternoon rowed to the boat. Senor. They made faces—like this. They mean, 'We dare you to come ashore.' Therefore the Americanos do it. I drive you to San Valencia Street. You will not be disappointed. Senor. Un peso por hora."

"Will it be safe?"

The driver shrugged his shoulders, casting a supercilious glance up at the laurels under which, in the central plaza, the carriage was rolling. "Senor is looking for—what is the word—trouble—with one big 'T'?"

Lassiter's instincts, in spite of the Cuban's irony, were immediately in favor of the safer and safer plan of turning back. He reflected that he was in a strange land, among strange people, speaking a strange tongue, a people who produced large numbers of under-sized and villainous looking individuals, a people who thought easily of assassination, riots, rampages and rebellions, dungeon tortures and executions at sunrise. A scientist who has forgotten his under-graduate days thinks of these things coolly and logically. Furthermore, any other Bostonian would have sprung to the old conservative, self-assured phrase. "It is best," Lassiter, remembering that he carried his grandfather's gold watch, did indeed say to himself, "It is best that I return to the hotel." Then he thought of the gleaming Miss Finch and he felt that if a sausage machine had been at hand he would have thrown the watch into it, chain, gold pencil, cigarette holder and all.

"Go to it!" he said to the driver, remembering that this expressive bit of slang had fallen from the most beautiful lips in the world. He leaned back on the cushions, gazing about at the iron gratings and shutters in the tinted walls of a narrow side street where the horse's hoofs on the cobblestones echoed as they fell with a noisy clomp-clomp-clomp.

Another noise, however, was asserting itself. In front, somewhere, there was a glow of light and the distant mumble of voices, laughter and mechanical pianos. Through a cross lane a surging crowd of merry-makers was moving in two streams. No women were there; between the lines of little saloons, pool rooms and cafes, gay with crepe paper, flags and white-framed mirrors, the mob without reason or individual volition, shouting, laughing, jostling, drinking, waving hands and like Martin Lassiter, wishing to see trouble, was composed of men. It came, went and eddied like dust in the wind. Here and there three or four sailors' uniforms appeared in a group. Here and there two or three of the brown clad, swarthy, waxed moustached policemen stood at corners of streets, directing those who paused to keep on with the movement of the bacchanals as if the quarter from which trouble would come had already been determined.

"This is no place," thought Lassiter, "for the Blake Professor of Experimental Psychology!"

The crowd, surging forward through the cross street at this moment, engulfed the hack. Passersby leered at the gleam of Martin's glasses and at the solemnity of his face that was so out of keeping with the occasion and the time of night. He seemed like a newly starched and ironed shirt blown by the wind into an environment that boded ill to its continued whiteness. Even Lassiter himself felt so when a cigar, projected out of one of the open-front saloons, landed with its hot, scattering fire on the horse's back.

The animal plunged, slipped on the cobblestones and was up again, his old blood coursing wildly in anger and terror. The driver was struggling with the reins, saving at the bit, the crowd was scattering in front of the horse's plunges. Lassiter "thought it best" to open the door and step out into the street.

He at once found himself borne away in the stream of men; indeed, he only had one chance to see his horse and vehicle being led by three of the gesticulating, comic-opera policemen in the opposite direction. The driver was standing upright on his seat waving his arms. After several moments of anxiety and elbowing, he found that the darker the shut-in street became, the thinner was the crowd.

In fact, he disengaged himself and leaned up against a plaster wall, straightening his necktie and wondering what he had better do next. He felt in his pocket. His money was gone!

"They are child-like, playful people!" he said to himself softly.

As if they had answered him, a great roar went up back there where the lights burned and the pianos drummed. Shouts, imprecations in Spanish, the scurry of the crowd, bobbing of hats, the sharp barking of police rattles and one good old American impropriety of speech lifted above the tumult, convinced him that the expected fight had begun. He could not see how he could help very much. Rowdyism was not his inclination. Therefore he walked away from it.

He had not gone very far, however, when pistol shots cracked out behind—the signal of distress of Cuban police who have had their clubs taken away, and as if in immediate answer came the yell and the clatter of a detachment of the Rural Guards bearing down upon him from the other direction—firing from the corner toward which he had been directing his steps. Far in advance of the United States Navy, engaged in his flight and at the same moment, as if to establish his nationality, he was daring them to fight, running and threatening at the same moment.

He was far enough in advance of the detachment to stop when he recognized in Lassiter's panic-stricken face the countenance of an American.

"What's the matter with ye, man?" he cried.

"Run!"

"I haven't done anything," Martin gasped.

"Ye was born in the States an' that's enough, me bye! They can tell it as well as me. Them devils will skewer ye as quick as they'd look at ye!" He grabbed the professor's sleeve. "Follow me!"

Lassiter heard the machete-swords being struck against the paving and house walls and the "Yah-

Lassiter thought he was being ridiculed. He was silent.

"I seen a board over in the corner."

"Well," said Martin, who prided himself on some skill in the game, "I do play."

"Let's have a game!" exclaimed Brophy, mopping his forehead. "That is, unless she wants to play with ye."

The girl seemed to understand this, for she shook her pretty head as she brought the board to them. Lassiter found himself intent on the game before he knew it. Brophy was no mean player. Gradually even the threatening signaling of police rattles outside was forgotten. The Irishman won.

"Play another?" Lassiter inquired.

"No, I guess not," said the sailor. "Say! Yer know it takes brains to play chess—what? Why don't ye play with Flo? She likes ye. She likes quiet games like us."

The girl, however, who seemed to catch the meaning of this, blushed and moved from behind Lassiter's chair where she had sat during the play. She picked up a guitar from the sofa and began to sing one of her crooning Cuban songs which wandered here and there in soft case. Her large eyes interrogated those of Martin as she played; when she had finished she tilted her head so that the front of her brown neck showed a straight line and laughed softly.

"Say, this is a good place, me bye!" said Brophy.

"You bet," replied Martin.

"We don't want any drinks, do we?"

"Oh, no."

"Well, then, if we don't get out before it's light, an' they catch us in this section, we'll get pinched. You couldn't fight yer way loose like me. So good-bye, Flo. Yer daddy is still downstairs keepin' folks out of the coffee shop."

The girl looked at the floor. She was very pretty in that pose and unconscious of it. She twined her round fingers in her scarf, as if embarrassed, speaking in a low tone to Brophy. As for Lassiter, he made his farewell with a beaming smile and a wide-sweeping bow.

"We're goin' out onto the back street," explained Brophy on the stairs. "An' make our get-away."

Martin disregarded that explanation. He said, "She told a special good-bye to you."

"She did not!" contradicted the sailor.

"What did she say?"

"She asked me to bring ye up again to-morrow night. She wanted to know first if ye was married."

"Can't be possible!" exclaimed Martin, wiping his eyeglasses. "I believe that knowledge is even a richer store than I had thought—occupying a wider field," he said as if to himself.

"Yer talk like a pair of rubber boots, mate," said Brophy, opening the iron gate leading into the dark street. "An' watch out now! They'd go fer ye yah-yah!" of the charging guards; he could see the sparks fly. However clear his conscience, he concluded to cast his fortune with the sailor man. The idea of holes in one's self is odious. He too, ran, and, infected with the other's spirit, he too looked back over his shoulder and uttered an unfriendly, unacademic sentiment.

"My name's Mike Brophy, of the Coyote," said the sailor. "An' speakin' of names, there is Valencia's beer garden round the round Valencia back until there was room enough to squeeze inside, where, except for the street light which peeped in at the shutter cracks, it was pitch dark. The air was still heavy with cigar smoke and the odor of wet glasses. Lassiter could hear the panting of his companion and their fat host and then the sound of blades beating on the door and commanding voices.

A hand reaching out through the ink of the gloom clutched his shoulder. "Come wid me," whispered Brophy, "there is stairs somewhere here."

"Fine!" said Martin. He was beginning to enjoy himself. He felt the delight of flight into the unknown, mysterious regions of the second floor. It was a surprise to him when Brophy pushed open the door at the head of the stairs that a flood of light came forth, showing the living quarters of Valencia. When the door had been closed behind them, he saw that sitting on a sofa in front of the heavy curtains over the windows was a Cuban girl of no mean appearance. She smiled as if she had expected them.

"We're safe here," Brophy was saying. "An' this here lady is Valencia's oldest daughter. She don't speak our jabber, but she's a lady. Flora, let me introduce yer to this here guy. He's a friend of mine, an' all right, I guess."

Lassiter bowed, the girl smiled; the room was both clean and cool. "Thank you for your kind words," Martin said to Brophy.

"Oh, that's all right, old sleuth," replied the sailor. "I'm sorry ye fell down. Them white clothes ain't no good fer that purpose."

Lassiter noticed a patronizing tone in the red-headed, blue-eyed sailor's voice and he found himself wishing to assert, at least, an equality. "Doesn't amount to anything," he said roughly.

"Where ye from?" asked the other.

"Boston."

"Play chess?"

uniform on sight. We'd better take different tactics, mate. I'll get ye into trouble."

"Oh, no," Martin replied. "I'll stick till you get out of this and back to the ship."

Brophy grunted, but Martin felt a touch upon his shoulder. He knew that it was the affectionate clutch of the big freckled hand of his companion, and his could feel the flow of a pleasant unaffected sympathy that gave a surprising measure of content and satisfaction.

The deserted alley through which they felt their cautious way opened onto a dimly lighted street. Brophy's alert eyes saw the two policemen at the corner a moment before their attention, drawn by Lassiter's white alpaca suit, had awakened them into action. The two Americans could see them lean down to beat on the sidewalk with their clubs; they could hear answering signals from the other end of the alley and the sound of running feet. They were trapped. Policemen bore down on them from both directions.

"Listen!" growled the sailor, almost pulling Lassiter off his feet. "Hail There is three of 'em! I'll take these two. The other one is yours. We'll fight our way out of this, do ye mind!"

A warm tingling crept over the professor's body.

"Aye, aye, sir," he said joyfully.

"When ye see the flash of a gun, be sure to quit," cautioned Brophy. "An' when ye close in, cover yer head from them night sticks an' go fer their legs if ye have a chance. Belay there! Ye shrimps!"

The first two officers were upon him. Just before Martin turned to meet his man he saw the sailor sidestep the first onslaught and by a skillful movement of his leg throw one of the foreigners into the gutter. "Star spangled banner!" laughed Brophy. He was closing with the second man. Even after Lassiter turned to meet his own opponent, he could hear the give and take of blows. Crack! the sound of the night stick. Bam! the impact of the closed fist. He felt a strange emptiness in his stomach—the despairing, sick feeling of those unused to contest. Then upon the fleshy part of his neck he received the first blow of the lignum vitae.

It was a delicious tonic. The pain of the blow was sharp but welcome; it awakened a new set of emotions, filled the distressing hole in Lassiter's stomach and brought him onto his toes with the joy of conflict. The policeman was fighting viciously. His club, his left fist, his sharp kicks seemed to come from every direction. Lassiter, ducking his head and from every protected crouch, plunged into this rain of blows with which the officer, acting with experience, expected to confuse his prey. The clasp of the policeman's body was satisfying. Lassiter, digging his toes into the dirt, rushed his adversary across the alley and against the masonry. With a free hand he pounded on the chin of the policeman, directing upward jabs that brought forth gasping Spanish ejaculations. They went down together, in the dark Lassiter felt for the night stick and twisted the bent wrist that held it until the grasp had been relaxed.

They were up again in an unscientific conflict of fists. Bam! Lassiter felt that another such on his cheek bone would determine the issue. He shook his head, grunted, drove his arm forward. Bam! This time, the solid blow had landed on the policeman's mouth. Lassiter felt that the satisfaction of this punch had a money value of several hundred dollars. Back and forth it went. At last a moment came when the Cuban officer, now fighting blindly, had disengaged himself and fallen back for another rush. It allowed Martin a chance to glance over his shoulder. One of Brophy's adversaries was stretched out in sleep on the pavement; the sailor was sitting on the other. He was a grinning spectator of Lassiter's contest.

"Go it, me bye!" came his panting voice. "If I don't help ye, ye'll feel better satisfied."

Lassiter braced himself again, threw out his knee and with a crooked arm caught the charging policeman on the taut cords of his neck. His whole body seemed to yield. It turned over once, rolling off Martin's leg, and lay whimpering in foreign tongue on the ground. Martin, wheeling toward his friend, made a wry face. "My Country 'Tis of Thee," he said proudly.

They took flight through the gloom, gaining a hundred yards and turning two corners before the police signals of distress sounded from the alley they had left.

"Yer all right, old marlin spike," panted Brophy. Lassiter had received several degrees; none had given him so much pride as this one, none were of greater honor, he felt sure.

At last he saw, through the gray of dawn which came down into the Havana streets, a cab rocking along ahead of them. He hailed it. "For," he explained to the sailor, "you will be safer under some sort of cover. Otherwise you would attract attention."

Lassiter once inside the cab, which he directed to the hotel, had an opportunity to catch glimpses of himself in the tiny mirror between the front windows. He looked very little like a respectable person of learning and refinement. His collar was torn, his necktie had disappeared; his right eye peeped out from a puff of bruises that were fast turning a rich purple.

"An' look up here," said Brophy, mockingly, pointing with a thick forefinger to a red welt on his forehead. "Do ye mind the signature of the peeler's night stick. Anybody'd think to see us that I was in bad company again. An' it'll be daylight before we get there!"

The Prado was long, beautiful, and deserted in the first burst of sunlight. Birds among the palms which nodded in the morning salt wind, were singing pleasantly. Lassiter was glad to be so satisfied, so healthy, so tired, so so close to alive. He thrust the sighing thoughts of Miss Dorothy Finch from his mind as often as they intruded; there would be time enough to suffer on her account when his world began to move more slowly again. He was sure he would not have to see her for several days; the best plan, he reflected, would be to leave a nice little polite note, informing the Finch family that he had gone to Matanzas. There he could hide until his eye had taken on its natural shape and color. So he concluded as the vehicle drew up before the hotel. And thus are the plans of the wise and good built for immediate overthrow.

Lassiter and Brophy had just stepped out of the cab and the former was paying the driver while the latter was casting a weather eye toward the open, dark blue waters of the Gulf. It was at this moment that the sailor heard a rippling laugh. He looked aloft. He was sure that it had proceeded from behind the shutters over the balcony.

"What's that?" said Lassiter.

"Nothin' at all," Brophy answered. "Where's the cab goin'? Sure I want to ride in it to the wharf below there. Where is it goin' now?"

"If you must know, it'll tell you—for a two-quart bottle of rum and alcohol. Sit down here on this step and wait a while."

Brophy latched up his trousers, in the back pocket of which he found two brown paper cigarettes which had been flattened to the thinness of knife blades. "Them is swell cigarettes," he said. "That's all I got. I've been savin' 'em. One of 'em is fer ye."

The smoke was delicious. He leaned back against one of the white columns and looked in smiling silence on his new friend. "It's lucky for my reputation that no one who knows me is up," he said.

"I think she knows yer," said Brophy.

"She?—who?"

"Pipe the young lady over there by the hotel door."

Lassiter turned like one who expects to see an angel with a flaming sword. It was the truth. There, fresh, indescribably neat, graceful and smiling, stood the daughter of Cheever Finch.

"Good morning," she said.

Martin was speechless. He stood up.

"Is she yours?" whispered Brophy in awed tones, pulling off his cap. He was sure he had guessed, right in spite of his friend's silence, and his first instinct was to save him from disgrace.

"Don't get any ideas, ma'am. Not too sudden," he said. "Yer see it was this way—we had a little difference with some foreigners."

"Thank you for telling me," said Dorothy. At the sight of Lassiter's woe-begone face she could no longer control her laughter.

"There!" said Brophy, drawing himself up. "Yer see there is nothin' to worry about, old sleuth. I've squared it fer ye. She's laughin' at ye."

"Dorothy," exclaimed Lassiter in torment. "This is the result of unforeseen circumstances."

"How violent they must have been!" she interposed sweetly. "But were you in an explosion, Martin?"

"She? Turned toward the sailor. "Was he?"

Brophy's earnest face, which had expressed only loyalty to his companion, relaxed now into a broad smile.

"He does look pretty bad, ma'am," he said. "But you see, there was three of them policemen and he an' I never fought together before. Yes, miss. An' after I had got two of 'em fixed I had a chance to watch his style. That last clout was a peach, miss. It made the Cuban see clams perchin' on telegraph wires, miss. Take it from me, yer gentleman friend is all right, or my name ain't Brophy."

"Oh, thank you," said the girl, holding out her hand. "Martin, why did you forget an introduction? This is a pleasure, Mr. Brophy."

The sailor grinned. "I ain't had an introduction to him yet," he said.

"Indeed," exclaimed Dorothy. "Mr. Martin Lassiter, allow me to present you to your old and honored friend, Mr. Brophy. U.S.N. And now, Mr. Brophy, you won't mind if I take Mr. Lassiter away from you? I don't think his appearance this morning does him full justice."

"Oh, Dorothy, I want to tell you—"

"Not now. I don't want you sitting out here. That's why I dressed and came down. I have some pride!"

"He does look a bit stove in, miss," said the sailor judicially.

"He looks like a last year's bird's nest," she said. "Come, Martin."

He had never heard her speak to him before with a tone of proprietorship. His instinct was to obey.

"Good-by, old marlin spike," said Brophy. "I'll tell the driver to leave the ark, and as they walked through the hotel office toward the elevator, and saw that Miss Finch was walking beside him with as much smiling self-possession as if she had been walking with a ruler in robes of state, did he feel the agonizing pain of conviction that he had severed the last possibility of winning her.

Therefore it was no ordinary surprise to him when in the elevator, with the boy's back turned toward them, she slipped her warm hand into his. "Positively," she said, "I believe you will pass. When I look at your eye, Martin, I begin to believe that you are human."

Today in History.

May 7, 1860, the arms of the state were taken down in the guild hall in London and the statue of King Charles was restored while the people drank healths to the house of Stuart. For Oliver Cromwell was dead and his son Richard had not the genius for government that old Noll showed. So in about two weeks England welcomed Charles as king.

CLIMBS TRANSM TO PLEAD LOVE

Indianapolis Man Wields Razor to Make It More Emphatic.

RIVAL NOT SO SLOW

Indianapolis, May 7.—Spurred because he had courted Nora Higgins for five years without proposing, Harry Smith on learning that he had a rival yesterday renewed his attentions in a vigorous manner by climbing into the girl's room through a transom making her listen to his pleading while he brandished a razor. Smith is in jail charged with carrying weapons. Miss Higgins says her second suitor was not so slow and that she is to be married soon.

Elwood Girl Weds Despite Accident and Sickness—Pays for License.

Elwood, Ind., May 7.—That Hoosier girls will not be deterred by obstacles when it comes to marriage was illustrated here by Miss Barbara H. Falstich, who took advantage of leap year and "popped the question" to Edna Redenbaugh, the baseball player and tin plate worker. Edna jumped at the proposal, and the young woman then thought it was her duty to pay the expenses of the wedding, which she did from her private purse. In leaving home she sprained her ankle, but telephoned for an automobile and reached the depot just as the train was ready to pull out for Anderson, and was joyfully helped aboard by her lover, who feared she had changed her mind at the last moment. On the way to the county seat the bride was taken sick and it developed that she had the measles. Wrapping an automobile veil over her face to hide the telltale welts, the couple hurried to the county clerk's office, obtained a license, for which the young woman paid the fee, then quickly and her willing beau to a justice of the peace.

SQUIRREL STOLE THE ACE.

Card Game Mystery Solved—It Happened in Winstead, of Course.

Winstead, Conn., May 7.—On a pleasant day last fall, a spirited game of "set back"—high, low, jack and the game—was played in a grove on the shore of Highland lake, between four men out for a walk. When the final game of a series was being played and Fred Jacobs who declared he had drawn the ace of hearts went to play the card he discovered it was missing and his "hand" was declared dead.

After the game the card could not be found and a count of the deck showed the fifty-one instead of fifty-two cards. The robber was discovered yesterday. A tame red squirrel, which had made its home in the grove for two years, had carried the ace to its nest in a high pine tree, where it was found recently by a boy who climbed the tree to see if the squirrel had survived the winter.

PROSE

GERMAN AMERICAN TRUST CO.

In saving money there is more prose than poetry.

But in securing anything worth having there is always more prose than poetry.

Men do not reach the high places except by climbing.

The preachers tell us that heaven itself is not reached "on flowery beds of ease."

But there is more poetry in plenty than in want; more poetry in independence than in dependence; more poetry in having money than in needing it.

The way to make sure of peace, plenty and independence is to begin saving for the future.

No safer place, no more convenient place, no more profitable place in which to deposit your savings can be found than this Trust Co.
